And now the fifth week of donut basketball is at hand. In the last four weeks, 37 games have been scheduled and played, and there are 18 contests yet to be fought over before the champions of the four leagues will be decided. Then comes the grand scraps for the high and mighty title of intramural mogul.

This afternoon on the McArthur Court floor, Bachelordon meets Phi Sigma Kappa at 4:15, and Sigma Pi Tau tangles with Phi Psi at 5 o'clock. In the men's gymnasium there will also be some matches: Alpha Upsilon battle with the Deltas at 4:15, and Sigma Chi and Phi Psi go to it at 5 p. m.

Frosh

 weary but still fighting doggedly. Kitzmiller went back to full.

Tuttich, after a gallant stab, took the first pass to the right of the line and reached the 30 yard line before the rook tacklers buried him in the mud. He was tackled so hard that he had to be replaced by Blackburne. Another pass to the right was snagged by Blackburne who sprinted to the 15 yard line before being smothered by charging rooks.

One Minute to Go
 A great gasp went up from the stands as Kelly dropped the slick ball as he was poised over the rook goal. Kitzmiller had passed to him directly over the center of the line. Less than two minutes remained and the ball was still 15 yards from the goal. The timer was observed examining his gun.

Again Kitzmiller passed to Kelly, this time far to the left. Kelly received the ball on the 10 yard line and with rooks swarming about him on every side twisted, squirmed, and fought on until he was finally brought down near the edge of the field, hardly a yard from the winning touchdown. With less than a minute to go the frosh line opened a big hole in the Aggie forward wall and Kitzmiller slide through for the score. The kick failed. Three plays later with the frosh again in possession of the ball on the rook 43 yard line the game ended. Score 10 to 6.

Frosh Line Good
 Choppy Parke, cocky, helmetless little field general sparkled to the extent that he even won commendation from rival rooters.

Moeller looked like a comer as a backfield prospect. Donahue played a great game, especially in the kicking department where he held his own with the touted Aggie booters. Kitzmiller's accurate passing did much in bringing in the bacon for his frosh teammates.

The yearling line showed strength and fight, and when the final punch for the score was needed it produced. Chappell Colbert, Christensen, Archer and the rest who got in the game showed evident pleasure in discommoding the infant beavers.

Treaty

 commerce, finance, communications and travel, that the relations between states are intrinsically different.

But, says the hard-boiled American, we cannot agree to compulsory arbitration and the outlawry of war if other states do not. Yes, but if we believe in the idea, we may take the lead in urging its general acceptance. And anyone who has been following events at Geneva during the past few years knows that there are only two or three obstacles to a formal renunciation of war. These include Great Britain, Italy and the United States. If we took the lead among these and definitely stated that we would arbitrate all our national disputes, regardless of their nature (just as any man does in civil war), the significance of that announcement on the part of the world's most powerful nation would bring others into line.

At the present moment we are faced with a proposal from France to outlaw war between the two nations. The proposal should receive the whole-hearted support of every citizen. The mind of the state department is hidebound by traditions and precedents, by doctrines and policies, by scruples and false fears. It moves evenly, never forward unless there is such a urge of public opinion, such an outpouring of national conviction that resistance becomes impossible. The opportunity of courageous action, undertaken in protest against timidity and precedent-ridden caution in foreign policy, and in vindication of what we claim is our national purpose, lies waiting before us. A treaty with France should be followed by similar treaties with other countries until the world through this vast network of arrangements brings public law out of anarchy.

The United States, in a certain sense, is the greatest danger to world peace today, simply because of our enormous physical power. Such a step of enlightened wisdom and founded both on high principle and real expediency, would be an epoch-making event in history.

CIRCULATING LIBRARY
 "A NEW BOOKERY FOR BOOK LOOKERS"

Student people are always wishing that they might keep posted on the very latest of modern fiction releases. Ofttimes even the fact that an interesting list is not presented makes them lose interest in reading for the time being. We have the list and propose to cultivate that interest.

People dealing in concrete subjects need a change in the nature of an abstraction as—
