Short; but Mr. Brodie is confidently expected. He missed four conferences in succession, but that was when he was United States minister to Siam, and his advance copy of the program reached him three months late.

Joe D. Thomson, editor of the Hood River Glacier, is coming to the conference. Mr. Thomson, trained in the law, found journalism more to his liking and has been running the news and editorial end of the Glacier in a way that has aroused much favorable comment.

Lee B. Tuttle, editor of the Medford Daily News, who had Art Schoeni, junior in the Oregon school of journalism, working for him last summer, is among those coming from southern Oregon. The News was moved up from a weekly to a daily paper more than a year ago.

The Oregon State Agricultural College is to be represented by C. J. McIntosh, Frank L. Snow and John C. Burtner.

Earle Richardson, who was graduated from the University of Oregon school of journalism in 1920, is arriving this morning from Dallas, where he publishes the Polk County Itemizer-Observer. About a year ago Mr. Richardson acquired the Observer. Seven years from the time when Elbert Bede took him to Cottage Grove to give him an opportunity to apply what he had learned in the University, Earle had become a publisher of one of the largest and best county-seat weeklies in the state. Record in brief: Reporter, Cottage Grove Sentinel; reporter, Oregonian; co-publisher, Clatskanie Chief; publisher, Elgin Recorder; publisher, Dallas Observer; publisher, Itemizer - Observer. Mr. Richardson's fastest progress came after he was married. Mrs. Richardson is coming with him to the conference.

W. L. Jackson, co-publisher, with Ralph R. Cronise, of the Albany Democrat-Herald, besides being recognized for his connection with a live daily paper, is known on the campus as the father of Olga Jackson ('27) who made Phi Beta Kappa here last year.

W. H. Cray, publisher of the Echo News, is killing two birds with one stone in attending the conference. He is also visiting his daughter, Miss Nan, who is a sophomore in the school of journalism. Mr. Cray years ago edited newspapers in Alaska. Members of the school of journalism faculty, then on Seattle newspapers, recall that his correspondence from Seward required no particular editing.

S. Sumpter Smith, manager of the Medford Mail Tribune, is another representative of southern Oregon. Mr. Smith has been a regular attendant at the conferences and has participated frequently in the programs.

O. C. Chapman, publisher of the Oregon Voter, who has his associate editor F. Harold Young (Oregon '14), ex-president of the Oregon alumni, is to be among those present. When not engaged in making statistical symphonies and political prognostications, Mr. Chapman finds time to study an occasional course in the University's Portland Center, to strengthen his academic background.

Walter W. R. May is another one of those last year's bachelors who is bringing his wife to the conference. Mr. May, who will speak for the Advertising Club of Portland at the banquet tonight, is city advertising manager of the Oregonian. Last summer he taught a journalism course in the University summer session, in Portland.

The Portland Spectator is represented at the conference by William H. Beede, advertising manager. No relation to Elbert.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Cartledge of McMinnville have reservations at the Eugene Hotel. Mr. Cartledge co-operates with Sheldon F. Sackett in getting out the Telephone Register. He was formerly connected with the Oregon City Enterprise.

A. E. Voorhies, publisher, and his son, Earle Voorhies, managing editor, of the Grants Pass Courier, will be on hand. The elder Mr. Voorhies was about the first newspaper man in Oregon to see the "shopping news" coming, and he has been publishing one as a department of his own paper for five years. Earle Voorhies is a graduate of the Oregon school of journalism, class of 1923.

H. F. Lake, who recently succeeded William H. Wheeler, formerly of Eugene, as publisher of the Enterprise at Halsey, will be here, according to word sent the committee in charge of the conference. Mr. Lake has changed the name of the paper from Rural Enterprise back to the Halsey Enterprise.

Ben R. Litfin, publisher of The Dalles Chronicle, is one of the leaders of the eastern Oregon delegation. Mr. Litfin has one of the best attendance records, having missed very few conferences since they were started in 1919.

Ira Hyde, Jr., publisher of the St. Helens Mist, is among the lower Columbia newspaper men who will be here.

Edgar McDaniel, publisher of the Coos Bay Harbor at North Bend, is another of the former presidents of the conference who are on hand for the tenth session. Mr. McDaniel recently moved his paper into a new building, and the move was made the occasion of a unique tribute, paid him by the business and professional men of Coos Bay. Through members of his staff they bought a two-page spread and advertised their high regard for him, paying the regular space rates for the privilege. Mr. McDaniel didn't discover what was being put over on him until after all the type was set and the paper was on the press.

J. H. Hulett, publisher of the Beaverton Review, is keeping up his attendance record. Mr. Hulett rarely misses a gathering of the journalistic clans.

John T. Hobbitt, publisher of the Silverton Appeal, sends word that he will be here. His sons, Mahlon and Lowell, are well remembered as former Oregon students.

Hugh D. Mars, editor of the Jefferson Review, is coming down with I. V. McAdoo, editor of the Scio Tribune. These two are prominent Linx county weeklies.

E. J. Murray, formerly of Klamath Falls, is the new owner of the Marshfield Times. He bought the paper from M. C. Maloney several weeks ago. Two of his staff members, Mary Lucile McLain, reporter, and Ruth Corey, society editor, are remembered as former students in the University of Oregon.

George N. Angell, with Mrs. Angell, are coming for the conference. Mr. Angell is editor of the Oregon Farmer. He travels much and gathers a great deal of his material at first hand.

Arne G. Rae, Oregon 1922, editor of the Tillamook Herald, whose advertising manager is Velma Farnham, (Oregon '25), is driving over with Mrs. Rae for the conference.

Irl S. McSherry, managing editor of the Oregon Statesman, Salem, who also is editor of several other
