Faculty Bachelors' Privileges Asked

POMONA college is going in for the dormitory idea in a large way. Our neighbor to the south plans next year to have four new primary units, each of which will house a quarter of the male population of the college, at a cost of a million dollars.

Such an elaborate plan as Pomona's means accurate and searching investigation beforehand of the best solution to student living problems available. It means that all details of management and social relations must be right. This is why the innovation reported to have been adopted in the program is especially significant.

"Constant contact between faculty and students will be provided by inclusion of apartments for unmarried members of the faculty."

This is no experimental move but the thoughtful inauguration of a policy which is to be Pomona's answer to the persistent faculty-student estrangement bugbear. With its adaptation of the architecture of Oxford and Cambridge to the requirements of the new buildings, Pomona is also importing a sort of modified don system better known among old world colleges than new.

Close contact between students and their teachers, while often considered in educational theory as one of the most important conditions of learning, has usually been foregone with a sigh by larger educational bodies. Freedom in faculty-student relations was considered the exclusive claim to distinction of the small institution.

The intimate association of students with their fellow students who are their teachers cannot be overdone. Its absence is one of the truly undemocratic things about so-called democratic education. There is no way in which the concept of professors as taskmasters, proctors, and school teachers can be better put in proper student perspective than by sharing the vicissitudes of living together—that is, we mean a certain amenable percentage of the faculty. There should be no assignment, no compulsion about it; merely attractive quarters available for men of the faculty who want them and subject to the same personal conditions as those occupied by students.

The Emerald recommends consideration of this proposal by the administration for adoption in the new dormitory plans.

Summer Jobs And Propositions

THE well known Mr. Gump has had to descend to the level of the ordinary folk and experience the vicissitudes common to the job of filling the dinner pail. Indeed, Mr. Gump, or Andy, as he is known to his intimates, has come down the scale so great a distance as to feel the bitter disappointments which fall to the lot of a book canvasser.

It is a matter of record that Andy-of-the-Big-Nose did not reap the golden harvest expected to result from his first day of labor on the doorsteps and in the hallways. In that respect, the verbose Mr. Gump was as many another who has attempted to gain sudden prosperity with similar "snap" propositions.

It is not a matter of record that that deserving salesman did or did not represent himself as a college student seeking to garner enough of the coin of the realm to carry him through another year. Since the audacious Andrew does not present a collegiate appearance, we doubt that he attempted that common subterfuge of the peddlers' clan.

Students who seek employment for the summer vacation are almost always confronted with proffers of golden opportunities to make easy money on scholarship schemes. For some few individuals, the statement holds true, but for many it is a waste of time.

That salesmen are born and not made has long been an almost axiomatic belief. Sales organizers will tell prospective canvassers that anyone can sell if he will only work hard and put in enough time. Without establishing the truth of the first statement, experience has often demonstrated the second to be false.

The exceptional individual who earns enough for a year of college by selling from house-to-house during the summer gets a great deal of publicity. The many who fail to make a go of the game seldom speak of their experience. He who has good reasons to believe that he cannot sell will do better to forego dreams of sudden and easy wealth and take the job he is sure will give a just return. —W. C.

Out-of-State Experts To Give Short Course

An important group of men from outside the state has been selected by the school of business administration to address the eighth annual short course for commercial organization secretaries to be held on the campus, March 19 to 23.

T. A. Stevenson of Tacoma, Washington, will discuss the technical problems of Chamber of Commerce work, with respect to budgeting, membership, and forms.

A. S. Dudley, secretary-treasurer of the national association of commercial organization secretaries, and C. W. Tillinghast, assistant secretary-treasurer of the same organization, will be here from Sacramento, Idaho, who was here last year, will also be present.

Richard Y. Haller, manager of the Oregonian broadcasting station KGW, will address the secretaries, and George O. Gatlin from O. S. C. will be here one day.

During the week that the secretaries are on the campus they will live at the dormitories and observe Oregon traditions as regular students. The freshmen, those coming here for the first year, are to wear green caps, and to undergo any other hardships that fall to freshmen. Those coming here for the fourth year will be given a degree of some kind, and those here for the seventh year will receive a "doctor's degree."

W. A. A. Mass Meet Will Be Held Today

A W. A. A. mass meeting will be held today at 5 o'clock in room 121 of the Woman's building.

All new W. A. A. members (those having made 100 points) are invited to come and are asked to bring 50 cents as dues for the remainder of this year. Also, all old members who have not yet completed their payments are requested to come to this mass meeting and do so.

Nellie Johns, W. A. A. president, urges that all members, old and new, come, as the meeting will be a very important one.

All-Star

James, Washington, have been placed at guards by the sports writers. Milligan was the main cog in the Webfoot defense, and consistently checked every man who played against him.

Burr on Second Team

James, Husky captain, was the inspiration of his team. He is built and plays with somewhat the same speed and skill as Swede Westergren, former Oregon All-Coast guard. James' floor work was of the best in the conference, and time after time he dribbled through the opponents' defense to score.

On the second team, Bill Burr, Oregon Aggie, and Overturf, Montana, have been picked at forwards. The Beavers' sudden slump on their road trip, losing five conference games, hindered Burr from making the first team. Overturf, leading Grizzly scorer, was one of the strongest offensive forwards in the North, but his defensive work was often weak.

Husky Men at Guards

Burgher, most consistent performer on the Vandal squad, is easily the second choice for center. Burgher led the Idaho team in points earned.

Second honors for guards go to Dalquist and Berensen of Washington. Dalquist, although used at center this year, is primarily a guard, and it was at that position he played after the tip-off. Berensen, playing his first year on the regular varsity lineup, promises to be one of the best guards on the coast next year.

Pangborn Manages News for Wilderman

Arden Pangborn, sports writer for the Eugene Register and sports correspondent for the Portland Oregonian, is supervising all publicity for the Associated Students in place of Samuel H. Wilderman, director of the A. S. U. O. publicity, who is now recuperating from a recent operation at the Pacific Christian hospital.

Mr. Wilderman is expected to resume his duties within the next two weeks. He is improving rapidly, according to hospital attendants. He is a law student and sports editor of the Eugene Guard.

Montana Beats Idaho 38-35 in Final Game

S. C. and Idaho University. It was the final game of the Northwest division of the Pacific Coast conference.

"HOLD 'EM YALE," SHOUTED THE SWEDISH CONSTABLE AS HE ROUNDED THE MOB INTO THE VILLAGE BASTILE.

"THE ANGLE WORM'S REVENGE" CHAPTER I

Little Nell Comes Home. Away to the north, a red-headed wolf howled in the south. The sun sizzled in a brassy sky like a peanut roaster. Spread over the desert was a million tons of sand.

That's gold in them thar hills," Rattlesnake Pete said to his burro, as he pointed toward the U. S. mint.

The draft from an airplane propeller caused the old prospector to sneeze. The moon had risen and he pressed it to his lips. A stream gurgled down his throat. Suddenly the burro who was lacing on his tennis shoes, sprang off his footstool and screamed, "Pepsodent!"

His eyes bloodshot like two red ink bottles, Rattlesnake Pete flipped his toothbrush out of its holster and leveled it at one of the burro's ears; "When you call me that, smile," he hissed.

Hot trumpet—Sock it!

THE saxophones moan. The trumpets trump. The cornets corn. And the fellow who plays the piano should have been an acrobat! That's the kind of an aggregation which gets real music out of dumb animals at a dance.

And real music makes even the best dancer thirsty. All right! Go over in the corner by the palm trees and quench your thirst with "Canada Dry." This ginger ale has a delightful flavor . . . tang to it . . . dryness . . . sparkle. It has a subtle gingery flavor because it is made from pure Jamaica ginger. It contains no capsicum (red pepper), and nota bene it blends well with other beverages.
