

Jewett Meet To Start Soon

Forty Students To Enter Speaking Contest Next Week

Thirty-eight men and two women will compete in the Jewett speaking contest for the pre-legal English classes next week, according to Kenneth Shumaker, English instructor.

The 10 o'clock section will meet Tuesday night in Villard hall at 8, with the other section as an audience. The 11 o'clock section will meet Thursday evening at 8 in Villard, with the other section as an audience.

This will be a preliminary round for the three prizes that are offered for this contest. The first prize is $25, the second $15, and the third $10.

The subjects of the orations will be picked from the four following topics: world peace, the Nicaraguan policy, political issues, and eulogies of great men.

The W. F. Jewett prize fund was donated about three years ago for the purpose of creating interest and promoting training in public speaking at the University. There will be extemporaneous speaking contests, for men only, in each class of introductory speech, and a contest open to any women in the University in addition to the contest in the pre-legal English classes.

Sixty-five dollars in prizes will be given in each of the other two contests. A record of awards, written on parchment, will be given the winners at commencement.

U. C. L. A., LOS ANGELES, April 13.—(P.L.P.)—Participation in the first World Youth Peace Congress with the opportunity of witnessing the Olympic games in Holland are the summer plans of Chester Williams, 29, who was selected among 80 other students of the country by the American committee of the congress to attend.

He was named as a delegate by Howard Kester, chairman of the U. S. committee only after he presented his recommendations and successfully passed a series of tests to illustrate his grasp of international problems, with particular reference to peace problems. Ten world questions were given him, and on each he was required to write a comprehensive analysis.

Dance Motif Changed For Chinese Students

UNIVERSITY OF WASHINGTON, SEATTLE, April 13.—(P.L.P.)—In deference to the feeling of Chinese students, who objected to "A Night on the Barbary Coast" as the motif for the sophomore dance to be held Saturday, on the grounds that it misrepresented Chinese life, the sophomore dance committee decides yesterday to change the name to "A Circus Night."

"Although the motif has been changed, which necessitates changes in the programs and decorations, there is to be no change in entertainment numbers and special features for the dance," Wes Brown, general chairman, explained.

McCroskey Tells of Experiences Of Debaters in European Cities

By BENOIT McCROSKEY
Much as I should like to tell you about the rough trip we encountered across the Atlantic, and how whole droves of people including our own member, Mr. W. E. Hempstead, Jr., were extremely indispensed, I must forebear. My assignment is to give you a general idea of our movements and trials while on the continent of Europe, with of course, the caution that in some particular incidents, that idea shall be extremely general. I know that it has been a long time since we were on the continent, but as I recall—I am a bit hazy about some of those dates—no one has yet touched upon that particular angle of the trip. Not that this angle would have been missed, particularly, but if any of our meanderings are worthy of account, then why not the European tour? I'm sure you see the logic of that line of reasoning. Now for example—well I guess I've used up enough space with that, I'll go ahead with the story.

Land at Naples
We landed at Naples (see Geography under Italy—if you can't find it ask Mrs. McClain) and although time would not allow us to ascend Vesuvius (also the cost of the trip) we did go out to Pompeii which we found to be just a trifle "deader" than Eugene during Christmas vacation. We then proceeded to Rome, where there are several alleged relics of an earlier civilization purported to have had some influence on architecture and the habits of modern dictators. St. Peter's Cathedral and the Vatican, also found within the city limits of Rome, offer food for reflection on the ratio that the number of post-card sellers bears to the magnitude of the thing pictured.

From thence we journeyed to Venice, a dirty city in the day time, and a dangerous city at night—one always forgets to go, oh yes, I forgot Florence. The only thing worth mentioning there is that the highwayman of a cabman charged me ten lire just from the Art Gallery to the station. Then Milan came next. I may mention in passing that while it is easy to write these names in a row, they are all separated, for people who have an aversion to paying hotel bills, by one sleepless night on the train. But as I say, Milan came next. We went out in a driving cold rain about six o'clock in the morning to see the Cathedral, and when the getting opened, we went in just to get out of the rain. However, we were soon out in the rain again because the bell-ringing ceremonies inside more than equalled the rain in undesirability.

Their next stop was Geneva, but that's only the seat of the League of Nations, and I'm not interested in that—the United States is not a member. I did learn to my sorrow though, that while the French franc is worth four cents, and the Italian lire five cents, the Swiss franc is worth in the neighborhood of twenty-five cents.

Visit in Paris
Then I must mention Paris. Among other things, Curley Lawrence lives there. I mean that among other things I should mention, Curley Lawrence lives there, not that Curley lives in Paris among a number of inanimate objects. Then of course there is Napoleon's tomb—they say that's very nice—and the Louvre, I meant to get there, but somehow, I seemed to be so busy, and I even went by there one evening and it was closed.

Well, that seems to me to be a comprehensive survey of all the things that really count to the American tourist in Europe. The only thing that we got for nothing that whole time was a moving picture of Il Duce, Benito Mussolini in Rome. That was because Hempstead took a chance of being shot on sight by a Black-Shirt, or at least warned not to do it again. We have had the picture developed since then, and it turned out just dandy—all you need to see Mussolini is an artillery range-finder, a pair of opera glasses and a vivid imagination.

Wilkin's Fate Doubted By Radio Listeners

(By United Press)
SEATTLE, April 13.—Guy Grayson, radio amateur, reported today that he believed he picked up a message from Captain Wilkins radio station at Point Barrow yesterday. Grayson says the station was fading badly but that Wilkins was apparently trying to talk to 6-ARD in San Francisco.

Other radio amateurs doubt if Grayson actually heard Wilkins' station as many were listening for him and no other station heard the signals.

Army stations in Alaska picked up no message from the explorer yesterday.

Grayson said he could not make out any coherent sentence in the signals he picked up.
