

Band Gives New Version of Song

Music at Assembly Has Novel Touches

It was a different version of "As I Sit and Dream at Evening" with which Walter L. Ferris' emerald and topaz band opened yesterday's assembly program. In a steadier tempo and minus the repetitive "oft recalled," the dreamy song was adapted to the band instruments. When the next number with its undercurrent of throbbing drumbeats began, the audience consulted its program with a collective and puzzled frown, not recognizing the stanza of "Mighty Oregon." Not until the instruments had marched into the swinging chorus did the grimace completely relax.

The Overture to Friedrich Flotow's "Martha" struck a more dignified operatic tempo, with its carefully modulated phrasing. The short and capricious, whimsy "Keep Sweeping the Cobwebs off the Moon," introduced a group of three Remick songs, of which "Auf Wiederseh'n" was the second, a selection in which sounded the faint shuffle of waltzing evening slippers and once a strain of the wartime melody, "Til We Meet Again." The group ended in the melodic branches of "The Sing Song Sycamore Tree."

The Norwegian mood characterized the "Sigurd Jorsalfae" suite of Edward Grieg. The first number, "Vorspiel" (Introduction), was merely a prelude to the subterranean rumblings which were soon submerged by the clarinets' higher notes, in the "Intermezzo" (Barghild's Dream). The audience was most enthusiastic about the "Huldigungsmarsch" (Triumphal March) with its recurring, familiar strain and exalted, exulting mood.

The selection from Otto Hauersbach and Rudolf Friml's rollicking musical farce, "High Jinks," was omitted due to the proximity to the luncheon, and the band crashed into John Phillip Sousa's "The U. S. Field Artillery," which set umbrellas tapping and brogues to thudding. What made the "Artillery" the most surprising of the selections however, was the pistol that unexpectedly blazed at the back of the stage and made the occupants of the center section start, and then giggle self-consciously. The only really conventional part of the program was the denouement, the singing of "The Pledge Song."

New Faces Seen
Some new faces appear as prospects for senior woman. Dena Alm, Susan Campbell, Luola Bengé, Alpha G, are the likeliest. Ruth Burcham, Pi Phi, was considering or considered, but she is throwing her resources to sister Bee Milligan in her campaign for junior woman.

For the two-year stretch as junior man on the executive council, Johnny Anderson still holds to his affiliation with the Betas. Jesse Douglas, Kappa Sig, will be heard from some more in this connection.
Two are entries in the junior men category of the student council. Walter Norblad, Sigma Nu, appears to be linking up with the Johnson chain. Dick Horn, Spec, will also try to place here, according to a vague report.

Pending the loosening of the Hubbs-McKeown jam, all ballot swapping will remain sluggish because all are trying to avoid the inevitable come-down that will result from such congestion as there is now at the top of the ballot. Perhaps the haggling will bring a solution today in a merger; otherwise the tri-party plan will proceed until it collapses from sheer top-heaviness here and anæmia there.

Two Men Set For Gallows

Kelley and Willos Refused Further Reprieve

(By United Press)
SALEM, Ore., April 19.—Announcement of the governor's refusal to commute their sentences to life imprisonment was received by James Willos and Ellsworth Kelley this morning in complete silence.

Neither of the condemned men had any comment to make when James Lewis, warden of the prison, broke the news to them in their death cells. Although the governor's refusal to interfere with the court decision sentencing the two men to hang was made known Wednesday afternoon and the news was given to the public last night, the two men most concerned in the fateful announcement were kept in ignorance of this latest development in their long fight to escape the gallows until after they had breakfasted this morning. Prison officials declared that they saw no reason for interfering with the sleep of the men by telling them of the governor's statement last night.

The execution will be staged at 8:30 o'clock tomorrow morning, only newspaper men and a few invited officials to be present in the execution chamber, in addition to prison officials in charge of the execution.

SALEM, Ore., April 19.—James

Willos and Ellsworth Kelley, condemned convicts who have evaded death sentences four times, will hang tomorrow.

The last hope the two men had of going to prison for life instead of dying disappeared last night when Governor I. L. Patterson issued a statement declaring he would not interfere with the decree of the courts.

The governor reviewed the history of the crime, involving the murder of two prison guards in a break for liberty.

Kelley and Willos were scheduled to die the last time Friday, April 15, but the governor granted a last minute reprieve when advised that members of the Oregon supreme court would recommend that the sentence be commuted to life imprisonment.

Later the members of the supreme court denied that any recommendation would be made and said they stood on the findings of the court which sustained convictions of lower courts.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Kelley of Grants Pass, parents of Ellsworth Kelley, and Mrs. L. V. Goode of Portland, a social worker who had sought commutation for the pair, visited the penitentiary and spent a half hour with the prisoners late today. A brother of Willos also paid a final visit to the condemned man.

Dear Gang: Is It Not Foolish to Say:

Let's follow the gang, they all eat here, our food is the best, our service the best; after the show the only place to eat; after eating one of our (?) you can study better, and all the stuff? Foolish! Well, we should say. Some of you know good food when you taste it, and some of you don't give a darn if it's good or not. There is one thing we are trying to drive home—Listen! We have one nice clean place. Nothing in fine fixtures—you can't eat fine fixtures. Our food is good as a rule, but some days it's terrible. So with our service. We all have our off days, you know. Anyhow, when you're down town drop in and see what we have to offer. If you are dissatisfied in any way, don't pay for it. That's that.
