

Student Total Rises To 4087

All Oregon's Enrollment Increased by 1,000 Since 1924

Full-time enrollment at the University of Oregon, including the Eugene campus, medical school and extension divisions in Portland, and correspondence work, has reached the total of 4,087, it is announced here. This figure means an equivalent of that many students taking 15 hours of work each term for the school year, and is not the total of individual students. In order to arrive at the figure, the credit hours of extension and correspondence students were added and the total divided by 45. Summer school students carrying full schedules were counted as one-half of one term, or six summer session students counted as one full-time student.

This shows a marked increase from 1924, when the total was 3,075. Much of the increase is shown in extension and correspondence work, since the regular campus enrollment increased during this time from 2,443 in 1924 to 3,131 in 1928. Increase in total enrollment is 36 per cent, and since much of this increase is due to extension and correspondence, a much higher ratio of individuals is being reached by the University.

In the year 1924 campus enrollment was 2,443, summer and post-session at Eugene equalled 64 full-time students, Portland summer session equalled 77, Portland extension equalled 102, and correspondence study equalled 172. Medical school was approximately 225. In 1928 the campus enrollment had increased to 3,131, summer and post-session at Eugene equalled 110, summer session at Portland equalled 129, extension classes equalled 313, and correspondence, 181. Medical school enrollment, which is limited, remained at 223.

Standards at the University have been consistently raised during this period also, it is pointed out, and thus the increase is attributed to students who are taking the business of getting an education seriously, and to those who are unable to attend on the campus, but who are continuing their studies by extension work and by correspondence study.

Dispensary To Treat Week-end Casualties

The dispensary will be open over Junior Week-end, as usual, to care for all casualties sustained during the events on and off the campus. Fainting, bruises, and small cuts, the latter consisting mostly of "mixtures of blood, paint and dirt," are the types of cases treated most during this time, Dr. Fred N. Miller, University physician, said yesterday. No serious injuries have resulted from Junior Week-end accidents in previous years, according to Dr. Miller.

With the discharge of three patients and the admittance of another the infirmary population has decreased to six. Those under the nurses' care are: John Walker, Alfred Taylor, Robert Luckey, Arnell Gillett, Stanley King and William Baker.

Kathleen Clarke, '25, Has Book Published

Mrs. Kathleen McNeal Clarke (Oregon, 1925), has just had her first novel accepted by the Macaulay Publishing House of New York, and the publishers have contracted for two more books.

"Under the Skin," which is the title of the book, is a psychological novel of race mixture. The scene is laid in Hawaii.

Mrs. Clarke has taught school in Oregon for several years. She has had several poems and plays published, but this is her first novel. She took much of her University work by correspondence. She is a member of Phi Beta Kappa.

Mrs. Clarke is now at work on her second novel.

Frederick J. Libby Coming Here June 1

Frederick J. Libby, executive secretary of the National Council for the Prevention of War, is expected to be on the campus about the first of June. While here Mr. Libby will be entertained by the local branch of the council, of which Professor Edgar E. De Cou is president and W. P. Maddox secretary. A luncheon or dinner will probably be given in his honor. Exact details will be printed at a later date.

Mr. Libby's visit is looked forward to with great expectation, for he is well known all over the country as being active in building up peace societies.

Cap and Gown Orders Must Be in by May 15

Orders for commencement supplies must be in before May 15, is the warning to seniors issued by the Co-op. The extension of time is being given because orders have been coming in very slowly.

The Co-op urges seniors to enter their orders for commencement supplies at once, and avoid the inconvenience occasioned by delay.

Madame Schumann-Heink Seeks Successor In Some American Girl

Some of the younger generation, and to put it more pointedly, some University students who sigh for a Utopia of perpetual vacation, or who look forward to middle life and old age as a haven of ease from labor, have little in common with Madame Schumann-Heink, the famous contralto, whose farewell program will be given in Eugene this evening.

At sixty-six, and after a career of half a century, Madame Schumann-Heink has no desire for the proverbial slipped case; but remarked to a friend who commented on her ability to still sing opera roles:

"Why I am not old. I am as happy as a child to think I can still do the parts of 'Erda' and 'Fricka' in Wagner's great operas, but I don't think it is anything phenomenal. I hope to do it ten or twenty years from now. One cannot afford to get old today. You would miss too much that is wonderful. I expect to see the day when aeroplanes are as popular as automobiles."

So, with the termination of twenty-eight years of concert singing in America, Madame Schumann-Heink plans to teach young American girls the principles and technique that have made her famous and to foster the production of amateur operas in the smaller cities of the United States. Through the influence of community choral and opera organizations she believes that moral conditions as well as the popular American taste for music will be improved.

"Let them all come together," she declares in a formal statement of her plans, "and sing—not jazz, but the great musical compositions, and we will see a proportionate decrease in the lawlessness, anarchy, hip-flasks and degrading tendencies that are now noticeable."

Madame Schumann-Heink is now searching for an American girl to whom she may pass the finer points of her art. Of the qualifications the girl must have she says:

"She must be the contralto, an unspoiled American girl to whom I shall teach all the secrets of my art. She must be a worker. She must be intelligent. She must have great art. When I find such an American girl I shall teach her as I would my own daughter; and I will love her too as my own."

Madame Schumann-Heink intends to instruct the girl who has these requisites in the subtleties of telling the poet's message with faithfulness and conviction. The Eugene program of Schumann-Heink, to be given on May 18, at the McArthur Court, will include numbers for which the singer has won fame through this interpretative quality. Students who wish to attend may present their student body tickets at the Co-op now and obtain regular admission tickets.

Miss Hardeman, the Kentucky violinist, who for five years played solos with Sousa's band, will be the assistant artist on the concert.
