Collegiate Clothes 'Going By Boards'

The university man, acknowledged oracle in the world of men's wear, has returned to sanity in dress, according to surveys of three widely separated educational institutions.

In the north, Yale University was selected as a typical university in a "university town." In the south, Vanderbilt was chosen, for the same reason. And for a middle ground, Princeton was selected.

In all of these, observers found that almost unanimously, the students had reverted from the "slouchy" college tendency of recent years, to a tidiness and care in dress that was surprising.

In all the colleges, the starched collar was found to be so nearly universal that it appears to constitute almost a uniform. The comfortable low, pliant starched varieties were most in demand in both north and south.

Extreme cuts of trousers, absurd shirt, collar and tie combinations and other freakish effects have disappeared.

The college man, according to one student, realizes that he is a potential wage earner, and that he is judged by his habits in clothes as well as practices. He is not attractive in his colleagues, to the co-eds or to his future employer in silly-looking clothes.

This is why he has decided to wear reasonable clothes.—O. S. C. Barometer.

Communications

An Extemporaneous Effusion

To the Editor: By the time this gets out, the fate of Open House will be decided. But whether or no, I've been wondering about something ever since I came to this institution in '26. Why doesn't someone snap out of it and realize that there are some students here who are not affiliated with any social self-preservation machines?

We do our darndest for Oregon. We attend her games; we yell for her team just as much as any of the others. We pay our regular $19.75, and listen to the same mundane lectures, but the only social affairs we get are church fellowship hours and fiddledwinks within the family circle. We are called bookworms and grinds when we aren't given a chance to dance and swap lines.

Open House was a long way from perfection, but it at least gave us one chance in a year to dig our silk dress out of the moth balls and hear some hot music. That abominable rot in Tuesday's "Emerald" which suggested that Open House be for "house presidents, pledges, and new students on the campus," is typical of Oregon's social spirit. Take everything of a social nature away from us benighted souls and view with a sneer the ruin you have instigated, but just once give us a chance to dance before casting us into everlasting social oblivion.

Let's have a social calendar with some informal student dances open to the common herd, so that we may at least see some dancing, dating a bit later than the minuet and the lobster quadrille. Haven't you been touched by this soulful plea? On with the dance, provided that it may be an unaffiliated one!

AN ANNOYED CO-ED.

Hoover or Al Smith

Victor P. Morris, assistant professor of economics, will mark the ballot in favor of the Republican candidate next month; and he won't waste any time in hesitation.

"I'm voting for Hoover, but I simply can't see the other side."

Prohibition and foreign affairs are the two principal considerations which determined Mr. Morris' choice. He prefers Hoover's stand on the first question, but it is the second which he considers most important.

In the next few years we are going to have many dealings with foreign nations; there will be the reparations question again, contact with the league of nations—whether we want it or not—and the foreign debt settlement.

"I don't think Smith is at all qualified to handle foreign affairs. He has come up from the sidewalks of New York, and his experience in governing has been limited to that state. Why, he's just making his first trip South, and I don't know that he has ever been to Europe. Has he?"

Hoover's extensive travels and his dealings with foreign nations make him excellently qualified for handling relations with the European powers, Mr. Morris believes. The past action of the Republican party in Nicaragua does not meet with the professor's approval; but he does not believe that Hoover can be held responsible for that.

"If foreign affairs were just limited to South America, I would be inclined to favor the Democratic party platform.

"As far as the tariff question is concerned, I am for free trade," stated the economist. "However, I don't believe that is a real issue in this election. In fact, it is my opinion that the two parties are changing positions on the tariff." Under a Smith presidency, Mr. Morris feels that there would be just as much protection as under a Republican regime.

Stanford Man Added To Business Faculty

Vern King, a graduate of Stanford university with the class of 1928, has accepted an assistantship in the University of Oregon school of business administration, it was announced yesterday by Dean David Paville.

Mr. King, who has been doing research work for the Emporium at San Francisco, will be engaged in collecting retail store problems for use in the local school and for exchange with the Harvard graduate school of business administration.

Many Graduates Of Oregon Now Teaching Here

Twenty-eight Alumni Fill Positions; Three Added To Staff This Summer

Jessie H. Bond, '08; E. D. McAlister, '24, and Roy Bryson, '26, all graduates of the University of Oregon, have been given positions on the teaching staff here this year, making a total of 28 graduates now on the faculty.

Mr. Bond, who was added to the faculty of the business administration school, received his Ph. D. degree at Chicago, studied several years at Princeton, and before coming here, taught at the University of North Dakota. During his undergraduate days at Oregon, he was prominent in student activities, especially in debate and forensics.

For the past three years, Mr. McAlister has been studying at the University of California, acting as an assistant, as well as taking work toward his doctor's degree, which he received last June. Mr. McAlister will be assistant professor in the physics and mathematics departments, and according to the report made by James H. Gilbert, dean of the college, he has achieved considerable distinction in connection with the work of devising ingenious apparatus for investigations in physics.

Mr. Bryson studied voice in New York City for two and one-half years before coming to the U. of O. music faculty, with Percy Rector Stephens. While a student in college here, Mr. Bryson was a member of Phi Delta Phi, national legal fraternity; Agora, discussion group; Pi Mi Alpha, music honorary, and Phi Delta Theta, national social fraternity.

Other Oregon graduates who are now teaching at their alma mater are:

Percy Paget Adams, '01, in the school of architecture, and who is beginning his twenty-seventh year as a member of the teaching staff; Mrs. Mary E. Watson Barnes, '09, of the English department, who is on a year's leave of absence on account of ill health; Elyer Brown, '16, assistant professor in architecture; Frederick S. Dunn, '22, head of the Latin department; Vergil D. Earl, '06, director of athletics, and a professor of physical education; Andrew Fish, '20, a former pastor of the Unitarian church in Eugene, and was born in England. Mr. Fish is now assistant professor of history.

James H. Gilbert, '03, dean of the college, and head of the department of economics; Mrs. Margaret Barnard Goodall, '04, teacher in the University high school; Miss Mabelle Hair, '08, with the extension division, and a prominent figure in the women's clubs of the state; George P. Hopkins, '21, professor of music; Philip W. Janney, '20, professor of business administration with the extension division center in Portland; Maude I. Kerns, '09, with the normal arts; Alfred Lomax, '23, with the extension work at Portland; Dr. Wilmoth Osborn, '24, University physician, and medical consultant for women; Mrs. Edith Baker Pattee, '11, supervisor of language at the University high school; Alfred Powers, dean of the extension division and director of the Portland center work.

Edward H. McAlister, '90, of the engineering school before it was discontinued here, and now professor of mechanics and astronomy; Ralph U. Moore, '23, principal of the University high school; Victor P. Morris, '15, of the economics department; Karl W. Onthank, '13, executive secretary of the University; Carleton E. Spencer, '13, former registrar and now associate professor of law; A. B. Stillman, a student of the University from 1909-1911, and now a member of the business administration staff, and Aurora Potter Underwood, '21, assistant professor of music.

Oregon Delegates Enjoy Conference Meeting at Seabeck

The Oregon delegates to the Y. M. C. A. conference at Seabeck this summer report a wonderful time.

The local "Y" not only had the biggest delegation at the conference but they also won the baseball, track, and volley ball championships.

The conference lasted for 9 days and delegates from practically every college on the Pacific coast attended. Claud Addison, president of the local delegation, said that the speakers at the camp this year were especially good. "The most popular instructors among the boys were Stilt Wilson, and "Dad" Elliot. Stilt Wilson, is a social leader, and former mayor of Berkeley, California, and "Dad" Elliot is an old football star of Northwestern university," he said.

Glen Brown, one of the delegates, said that the group held several very successful clam-bakes.

The high lights in the 9-day session were trips through the navy

Jerald Owen, Sunday editor of the Oregonian, are the men elected.

The chapter assumed as a project for the fall term a plan for sending out questionnaires to Oregon newspapermen in an attempt to learn the opinion of the editors themselves as to which Oregon papers excel in various phases of newspaper work. In this way, the editors will vote as to which paper has the most interesting feature, the most attractive make-up, and so on. Arden Pangborn and Malcolm Epley will prepare the questionnaires.

Election of fall term pledges will take place at the next meeting of the chapter. Joe Pigney, Lawrence Mitchellmore, and Carl Gregory were named by Walter Coover, president of the chapter, on the pledge committee.

Chalmers Nooe, Leonard Hagstrom and William Haggerty were appointed to plan Sigma Delta Chi social events for the fall term.
