A Matter of Some Disagreement

"It is obvious that newspaper articles will often include statements, the truth of which may be questioned by some scientists. Indeed, even in some of the most important national meetings of scientific specialists, much time is devoted to discussion of the validity of statements made in the papers specially prepared to be read at those meetings.

"Gross misstatements of facts were not common."
 "In general . . . the reliability and high standard of the material collected is one of the definite impressions made by the study . . . Newspapers appear to be more up-to-date in things biological than are college and high school texts on the subject. This, however, is not to be considered an adverse criticism on the texts. Texts must contain material which, for a time at least, has been carefully evaluated, and newspapers are expected to present discussions of new information while it is still somewhat in its formative stages."

It would seem that there are at least some men with scientific background who, after making a complete study of the question, arriving at a different conclusion from that reached by Dr. Hodge.

The question as to the treatment of scientific news in a scientific manner by newspapers, raised by Dr. E. T. Hodge on the campus recently, has been the subject of an exhaustive survey by Charles W. Finley and Otis W. Caldwell of Columbia University.

May we pass on the following conclusion reached by the two investigators after 150 pages of scientific research?

Today's Question: What do you think the greatest fault of modern youth is?

Robert Derry, sophomore in chemistry: "Whatever the biggest fault is—we like it."

Max Carman, sophomore in business administration: "Modern youth does not look into the future and they think that life has no serious problems."

Irene Hartsell, senior in history: "They take themselves too seriously in what they do. They work and play too hard."

Robert Kelly, freshman in pre-law: "There's nothing wrong with modern youth—this old-fashioned attitude that prevails makes our actions seem such."

Lew Harris, freshman in education: "Modern youth takes too much for granted—they don't look forward—but just take things as they come along."

tough as a beanery steak while they themselves showed none of the football that has made them the terrors of the Northwest this season.

"After the game one of the Oregon rooters declared that the Web-footers need wet weather and a heavy field to show at advantage. From the looks of the Bruins it would have to rain here for months before the Oregonians would be ready for the Trojans."

And then again, of course, maybe not. Oregon would rather play on a dry field any day than a wet, soggy one. Chances are that Oregon did not look so good in the south, for the games with Montana and U. C. L. A. were anti-climax to the battle with the Beavers.

Fifteen Years Ago

From Oregon Emerald, December 4, 1913
 The six sororities having basketball teams will start practice at once for the first game of the inter-sorority series, which is on January 13, 1914. Delta Delta Delta and Beth Rhea will be the first to play.

Plans for an informal masque ball, to be held March 7, were the result of a junior class meeting yesterday. The juniors hope to make the ball an annual affair.

Twenty-five Years Ago

From Oregon Weekly, December 7, 1903
 Three games won, two games lost, and one tie game, was the record of Oregon's football team this fall, under the leadership of Warren Smith, coach.

The sophomore ball Friday evening was a complete success. The armory pavilion, scene of the evening's gaiety, was charmingly decorated in the class colors, with mirrors around the walls and festoons of ivy and white crepe paper. There was a four piece orchestra.

CELEBRATING A BIRTHDAY

since the recent holidays marked our anniversary

During Thanksgiving holidays five years ago the Co-op was moved from the little building at 1258 Kincaid street into our present location. These five years have been years of slow but steady growth. In November 1923 the store was worth about $7000. In the five years we have done a total net business of approximately $356,000. The net profit on this volume of sales was about $21,000. Of this amount $14,000 was used to retire indebtedness and enlarge the activities of the store and the balance, $7000, was returned to individual students through the dividend plan. Under this division of earnings one-third of the total was returned in rebates and two-thirds were put back into the business.
