Record to Be Made of Women's League Work

A complete history of the Women's league is being prepared by Gracia Haggerty, member of the league council, and is to be put in form for permanent record with other papers and reports of the league.

Activities, social events, officers, loan funds, and benefits will be described and summarized for further reference of those interested in the organization. Some of the records have been lost since the establishment of the Women's league on the local campus in 1912 but the remaining material will be included in the history, and an attempt made to secure additional information on the workings of the league during those years of which there is no record.

Big Business No Longer Laughing At College Men

Schools Turning Out Many Who Win Selves Niches In Corridors of Money

Can a college actually turn out a high grade professional business executive, as it can grind out doctors, lawyers and engineers from its classrooms?

That question—long academic—has been answered. The answer is, "Yes."

The average salary of the class of 1910, first graduating class of the Harvard school of business administration, is in excess of $21,000 annually for each member. There has been a surprising change in the attitude of great enterprises and industries which once regarded the college trained man with an indulgent smile, says H. J. Forman in McClure's magazine.

Graduates 380

At the Harvard school, the first school of business administration in the country, 300 young men were graduated last year—and 80 employers, representing some of the largest corporations in the country, sent representatives to interview most of them long before they received their diplomas.

Although the school discourages its graduates from starting at high salaries, preferring that they begin from the bottom, many have left school with assured incomes of from $5,000 to $10,000 awaiting them. And of the more than 3,000 graduates of the school since its inception only one has proved a complete failure in the business world.

Instead of laughing at the idea of college-trained business men, the biggest industrialists and trade leaders in the country are aiding in their training. For the major factor in their training is not bookish theory, but the solving of real problems in manufacturing and merchandising, trading or transportation which have already presented themselves in practical business.

Handle Actual Cases

The students of the Harvard school are largely graduates of the university's academic courses who have embarked on a two-year intensive preparation for the business world. The first step is to acquaint them with general business practice and the inducements of the various lines, after which they are permitted to specialize for banking, retail merchandising, railroad management or whatever field they may select.

Once settled on a course, they are confronted with actual cases taken from the records of big business institutions and worked out scientifically by faculty experts so that the degree of profit or loss, failure or success, according to the moves and decisions made by the student, can be determined in definite relation to the facts in the actual case.

directorate, therefore, with the idea of choosing a staff that will be conscientious and competent in their respective positions.

Date Not Selected

A definite date for the week-end celebration has not been selected at the present but will be announced later. Active work cannot begin until the entire appointments are made and attention may be turned to the more detailed work.

The entertainment features of Junior Week-end will be similar to those of past years, according to Dobbin. The first event will be

For action, mystery, melodrama and appealing romance, THE FIRST KISS is second to none.
