

Frosh to Play Last Big Game As Yearlings

Yearmen Meet Babes 7 O'clock Friday Night; Preliminary to Varsity

Team Lost First Game to Northerners Week Ago

The yearling basketball players will get their last chance to play as freshmen when they meet the Washington babes at 7 o'clock Friday night at McArthur court.

The game, which will be a preliminary to the varsity contest, was formerly scheduled for an earlier hour, but both games were set for later in the evening because of the editors' banquet the same evening.

The frosh dropped their first game to the northern freshmen a week ago, and will have their only chance to retaliate tomorrow. The players and the coach, Spike Leslie, were of the opinion that they lost the game because of their own poor playing rather than because the Washington team was really superior.

If the yearlings play to the best of their ability they will have every chance of winning, if not they will undoubtedly lose. The varsity and freshman squads scrimmaged last night, and although the varsity did not run away with the game, the frosh play was ragged.

The second team freshmen lost a close game to the C company quintet of the Lane county league at the Armory floor Tuesday night. Here is the summary:

Y. M. C. A. Will Elect New Officers Today

The election for new Y. M. C. A. officers will be held today at the "Y" but from 9 until 5 o'clock. All men students of the university are eligible to vote.

Don Campbell, junior in sociology, is the only candidate for president. Campbell has been very active in cabinet work, among other things, attending the industrial seminar at Tacoma last year. He is chairman of the reorganization committee, which has just brought about a revision of cabinet policy.

Wilbur Sohm of Portland, and Hal Anderson of Eugene, are the two candidates for the vice-presidency. Sohm, who is a sophomore in architecture, is chairman of the interchurch council and a member of the cabinet. Anderson is in charge of the discussion groups which are being held at the men's living organizations, and he has been active in student body work. He is a junior in geology.

Walter Evans, freshman in pre-law, and Carl Moore, sophomore in economics, are the candidates for secretary. Ray Foss, freshman in business administration, and Shailer Peterson, junior in biology, are running for treasurer.

Waffle Sale by Frosh Proves Big Success

Waffles, great numbers of them, were consumed by the hungry students of Oregon at the waffle sale which was held by the frosh commission yesterday afternoon at the Y. W. C. A. bungalow.

Twenty tables which were placed in the bungalow were too few for the students who crowded the room. Trouble caused by blown out fuses slowed service temporarily, but after these were repaired, everything went smoothly.

Virginia H. Smith was general chairman for the event, which was held to raise money for the Y.W.C.A.

Education Honorary Holds Social Tea Hour

A social tea hour was held by members of Pi Lambda Theta, national education honorary, for women, yesterday at 4 o'clock in the women's lounge of the Woman's building.

The program consisted of a report by Mrs. Andrew Fish, instructor in home economics, on "Growing Into Life" by David Leabury. The report analyzed child psychology and dealt with problems between parents and children.

Nightfall Is A Wolf

Nightfall is a wolf

Puritan

He lived so close to God's white world;
He drank so deep of ice-bound streams;
He looked so long at frosted pines,
And trudged so far by scant moon-beams . . .
How could he laugh at purity?

No breath to breathe the air but his;
No thing to char but fresh-felled oak;
No one to know his thoughts but God;
No laws to bind, but those he spoke . . .
What else could touch security?

A virgin world, so new, so vast,
That pushed snow mountains in his path;
That lapped up life, but newly cast
To frozen crystals, as aftermath . . .
How could he laugh at purity?

Way of Sacrifice

By Fritz Von Unruh
They were just a group of lads
in the German advance on Verdun, wondering what it was all about—
a schoolmaster, a scholar, a drummer,
a cook, a waiter, a cadet, a curate,
and the captain. Lying on the floor in the transport train they heard the incessant sound of the wheels
on the metal rails, of the rails
under the wheels, and in that sound they imagined they could hear the noise of shells and crash of detonation. The train roared on through the darkness toward the German front, carrying the lads who wondered what it was all about.

So Fritz Von Unruh paints the opening scene of "Way of Sacrifice," published by Alfred A. Knopf and company.

The men are in the trenches waiting for the zero hour, each man's nerves on edge, each man feeling the hopelessness and wastefulness of it all, yet each man forced on involuntarily into the hell of Verdun. The men go over and charge the French lines under heavy shell fire, the scholar and the captain go the way of sacrifice. The cook and the waiter are taken wounded and crazed to the hospital; the curate, both his eyes blinded, disappears, stumbling through the woods, while only the drummer and the schoolmaster and the young cadet return physically unharmed, still wondering what it is all about.

"Way of Sacrifice" calls to the mind of the reader Stephen Crane's "Red Badge of Courage," published a half century ago. Although deal-

Your House

I pass your house.
The lights are long fingers on the grass
beckoning me.
I can see you there alone before your fire
Smoking your pipe
Fitfully.

There's room in that big chair for me.
I rub my cheek—
It almost feels the roughness of your coat.

Your white walk tugs so at my feet. . .
If only your windows would not smile so sweet a welcome!

'Old Oregon' Published By Students; Out Today

"Old Oregon" will be out today. This is the first time for a number of years that the magazine has been edited and published by journalism students. Marion Sten, Serena Madsen and Cecil Snyder are the associate editors.

The first copy of "Old Oregon" was put out by Dean Eric W. Allen's class in editing and publishing and is the only other time it was in the hands of the students. Since that time the alums have been publishing the magazine, which comes out every month.

The cover will feature a drawing of the Campbell Fine Arts building to be erected as a memorial to Prince L. Campbell, former president of the university.

Call for Seniors To Help With Ball Issued by Leach

Few Report Art Building; Schedule for Women to Help Runk Announced

Unless all seniors report for work immediately to help with the hanging of the decorations for the Senior Ball, which is to be given Saturday night at the Woman's building, the decorations will not be up in time. So far only three or four seniors have gone to the art building to help Lloyd Runk, according to Marion Leach, head of the women's committee, and it will be impossible for these few to finish the work.

A list of the hours that the men's houses were to report for work was printed in yesterday's Emerald. The seniors from the women's houses are to report as follows:

Thursday, 1 to 6, Alpha Gamma Delta, Alpha Omicron Pi, Hendricks hall; Thursday, 7-11, Alpha Xi Delta, Thacher cottage, Chi Omega,
