

Japan Offers Complexities, Say Officials

Simplicity Grows Out of Education Thinks T. Kawasaki

Modern Movement Shows Rapid Development

"Although it sounds paradoxical, Japan today is a land of complexity and at the same time a land of simplicity," declared Torao Kawasaki, a member of the Japanese consulate-general of San Francisco, at an open meeting of the International Relations club last night at 7:30 in Villard hall.

"In 1854 Japan made a treaty with the United States, and four years later we had concluded treaties with many countries. After this new orders had to be adapted to the soil of the old orders. Now they are co-existing.

Ignorance Barrier

"One of the greatest difficulties when people of different nations get together is ignorance. Some one said that knowledge kills hatred. Prejudice is also a very hard thing to overcome. If we can overcome ignorance and prejudice, we can promote international peace. Educational institutions are a great help in promoting peace also, for they are the basis of international peace," concluded Mr. Kawasaki.

Slides were shown of the natural beauties of the land and of the beautiful architectural structures, while Mr. Kawasaki gave details about them. The slides were used in an attempt to show the responsiveness of the Japanese to the beauty of nature, and also the contrast of the old and new life of Japan.

"Japan, like any other country, has its show places," said Mr. Kawasaki, as pictures of shrines, castles, and summer and winter resorts were flashed on the screen. "It seems to me that we feel the same kind of sentiment in deifying our emperors and country's benefactors as you do in your pilgrimages to Washington's and Lincoln's monuments."

Japan Modernized

Office buildings, factories, and industrial plants showed the modern trend of Japanese business life. Mr. Kawasaki mentioned that the newspaper business is very prosperous in Japan, and that the large newspaper plants are the educational centers of the city, maintaining auditoriums for entertainments and lectures.

The modern movement in Japan is illustrated by the Japanese mother, in her old-fashioned kimono, and her child, dressed in European clothes. "The people of Japan are not discarding the good things of the old ways, but are taking the good things from the new," concluded Mr. Kawasaki.

Mr. Kawasaki also addressed the 3 o'clock class conducted by Verne G. Blue, professor of history, in Villard, on "Economic and Political Conditions in Japan."
