For Northwest-Southeast Game

AT the University of Oregon a proposal is being considered from the University of Florida for a football game at Miami. Well wishers of the university and its football team, as well as people generally of Oregon, may well hope that the university authorities can find it practicable to accept.

The value in publicity alone of such an enterprise will be very great both to the university and the state. Nothing that could be done here would be more potent in this regard. Oregon State college demonstrated last winter what can be done along this line when its football team traveled all the way to the Atlantic seaboard and defeated New York university in a way that decisively established western football in the consciousness of the whole United States as something to be reckoned with hereafter. Thousands of easterners who had never heard of the state of Oregon until then began to look it up on the map after that game.

Games between representative eastern and representative western football teams have been great drawing cards for years past. Here is a chance for a game between representative northwestern and southeastern teams—a meeting of giants from the country almost. There is an allure in the idea. And Oregon has a real football team which could be depended upon to give a satisfactory account of itself. So here's hoping the banner of Mighty Oregon may be carried into the deep South next December.—The Register.

Assembly Features Oregon Reading

WAS it a gang fight, a dog pile, or a revolutionary mob? What were all those hands waving? What was that countless red-faced man frantically struggling for, reaching back and forth through the window in which he was standing? And those signs about getting a card inside at the graduate manager's office? Or the gibbering of the mob, a surging, billowing sea of eager college humanity? Had it been out on Hayward field, one could easily have thought the push ball contest or the cane rush between freshman and sophomore warriors was in progress. The New York stock exchange with its hectic bidding was tame by comparison. Yesterday the 1929 Oregonians were partially distributed.

And then as the successful candidates to receive year books dispersed to some bypath of the campus to delve immediately into profound contemplation of their respective profiles, the stormy session of distribution calmed.

But not all of the students stopped in the bypaths to scan their pictures and gloat over the achievements of the year, their honoraries, their activities, their "work." For a nettled handful proceeded to the assembly in the woman's building, and there, snug in the cozy atmosphere of towering wooden beams, swinging rings, ceiling radiators, and overhead amplifiers, they settled comfortably back and began to read the year books there.

"Oh, hang it all. What's that guy raving about up there? Wish he'd have a heart and not talk so loud. Give me a better chance to read this Oregonian." Circumstantial evidence would indicate that such was the unexpressed line of reasoning of those who so rudely read the Oregonians instead of listening to the speaker of the day.

The 1929 Oregonian may be a whiz of a book. And Dr. Graham Stuart, professor of political science at Stanford university might not have been so unusual as to draw the listeners to the edge of their seats.

But either of these statements, if true, should not be sufficient to excuse those students who, seeing fit to come to the assembly in the first place, failed to give at least considerable, courteous, if not enthusiastic attention to the address on "World Peace." To speak to a group of indifferent college students dreamily dozing in the classroom, is a thankless task in itself. But the problem becomes almost superhuman when half of a large gathering persists in flagrant violation of the ordinary rules of etiquette which the university should contrive to inculcate in its sons and daughters if it succeeds in nothing else.

he was working for, thought that artists were immoral and effeminate. They discouraged him and so disgusted him with the artistic profession that he wanted to be a mechanic or a contractor, anything in fact, but an artist.

Then he started to study at the Oregon extension division. There he met Avar Fairbanks, the sculptor, learned how mistaken his conception was and, finally, came here to major in art.

He has put himself through school by his own unaided efforts ever since he was in the seventh grade.

VIC WETZEL IS WINNER IN HIEB WETZEL BROS POEM CONTEST

Athlete Submits Best Interpretation Of Literary Work

Victor Wetzal, Oregon athlete, won the Hieb Wetzal poem contest conducted in this column yesterday. Here is the poem:

Then ask not wherefore
This man's army
Six men died
The fern
Are you insured?

Wetzal will be given the award of a free ride in a McMoran & Washburne elevator early next week. His interpretation is as follows: "I picture a railroad locomotive crossing Thirteenth street. A baby buggy rolls out into the track, but just as the locomotive nears it, it turns out on a switch."

The author declares that this interpretation is almost perfect.

WE CALL IT A CASE OF TWO GUYS KNOWING THE SAME BOOTLEGGER.

A certain young Phi Kappa Psi bought a snappy new four-in-hand tie
But he picked Campus Day

BUT AFTER ALL, THE STANDING IN LINE FOR THE CAMPUS LUNCHEON WASN'T A BAD THING.

You've got to keep the students in training for registration, and that's a good way.

Woodie, cutting off runners stealing second. Two men were thrown out in succession in the sixth inning.

Claude Brannon, the Washington captain, was largely responsible for his team's spurt in the middle of the game and the consequent benching of MacDonald. He hit home runs over the right field fence in both the fourth and fifth innings. These homers accounted for six runs. Incidentally, he has caught 33 innings in the last two days, receiving from seven pitchers.

The second game with Washington, which will finish one half of Oregon's schedule, will be played at 2:30 this afternoon at Reinhart field. It has not been announced who will pitch for either team.

Noted Speakers For Assemblies

Dr. Foster and Mexican Education Head on List

The first assembly of the Eugene Summer Session will be an introduction to the University of Oregon. The singing of Oregon songs, talks on the various organizations, and special music will make up the program, which will be held at the Music building, says Dr. Dan E. Clark, assistant director of the extension division, who will be in charge of the assemblies.

The special speakers for the other assemblies will be held three times a week on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, will be William Trufant Foster, former president of Reed College and now director of Pollak Institute for Economic Research, at Newton, Mass.; Dr. Isaac Leon Kandel, professor of education, Teachers' College, Columbia University; Moises Saenz, acting secretary of education, Republic of Mexico, and Dr. Louis Wolsey, chancellor of the Jewish Chautauqu Society, Philadelphia.

There will also be addresses by visiting members of the summer session faculty and special music. After the first assembly the rest will probably be held at Villard assembly hall.

EXTENSION DIVISION-EMERALD PROGRAMS

Sunday, 4:30—Vesper services for Mother's Day. To be broadcast by remote control from the Music building auditorium.
Tuesday, 8 o'clock—Talk by Dr. A. E. Caswell.
Wednesday, 8 o'clock—Talk by Dean J. H. Gilbert.

Amphibian members will practice for "Thar She Blows" today from 3 to 5 o'clock.

The engagement of Mary McLean of Portland and Ralph Geyer of Burley, Idaho, was announced last evening at a dinner at the Zeta Tau Alpha house. Tawny cats jumping out of black satchels announced the engagement.

Individual corsages of sweet peas and Cecil bruner roses marked the places for about thirty members and guests. Lilies strewn about the table and room were used in decorating.

The honoree is a senior in journalism, and has been active in Oregon and Emerald work.

Ralph Geyer, senior in business administration, has been prominent in the department and in varsity debate work. The engagement was also announced at the Sigma Hall dinner given at the men's new dormitory.

Guests at the Zeta Tau Alpha house included Barbara McLean, Thelma Jane Vernon, Vena Gaskill, Dorothy Thomsen and a number of mothers visiting for the week-end.

Ethel Helliwell of Portland announced her engagement to John Geyer of Ashland last night at the Delta Zeta house. A large doily in the center of the table bore betrothal cards and a frosted cake decorated with the Greek affiliation letters. Pink and green, sorority colors, were also used in decorating.

Miss Helliwell, graduate of 1928 has been working as assistant in the library. Mr. Geyer is a first year law student.

STUDE'S PROGRESS... A Satire: By Wilfred Brown

So prated Student and Politician parted one from the other and each went his own way. Student had traveled not far when he met with another pilgrim whose name was Promisor. They journeyed along the way together for a time, and Promisor spake unto Student, saying:

PROMISOR: I prithee, Student, whom art thou supporting for the presidency of the council of the Happy Land of Collegia?

STUDENT: I have not as yet given the matter my serious consideration. Who, believest thou, is the most worthy of our fellowship for our choice?

PROMISOR: 'Shlood, the answer is simple. There can be but one choice for a pilgrim of normal intellect, and that is Debater. Knowest thou him?

STUDENT: Yea, I have met with him in my travels. But why, thinkst thou, is Debater worthy of the presidency of the council of the Happy Land of Collegia?

PROMISOR: Why? Egad, think ye of all the things which he hath done for the inhabitants of this land. Did he not, by virtue of his superior powers of speech, triumph over the first orators of the Land of Idahola? Hath he not aided in the erection of our great bonfire of victory, which is constructed once each year? Hath he not at all times verged close upon the roll of honor for high scholastic achievements among the pilgrims of the land? Hath he not engaged himself with the committee to cause youthful and desirable pilgrims to pass through our land enroute to the Golden City of Education, instead of by the route of the Valley of Agricola? How canst thou say, "why is he deserving" in the face of all this?

STUDENT: I perceive that he hath correctly aided in the erection of the bonfire of victory, which is traditional and required of those who would direct the destinies of the council of the Happy Land of Collegia. But what think you of Halfback for the presidency of the council? He, too, hath aided in the erection of the bonfire of victory.

PROMISOR: Why should we give the presidency of the council unto an Athlete? Because he walketh in the Pathway of Privilege and no man requireth of him his credentials or his scrip? An athlete is already sufficiently honored. Besides, is not Debater a person with a superior power of speech? That is traditional. The presidency of the council of the land must needs be an orator, so that he may not feel himself embarrassed, should he be obliged to meet with the representative of the councils of other lands.

STUDENT: I shall give the matter my consideration, and shall give my vote unto Debater should I deem him the most suitable pilgrim for the office.

PROMISOR: I thank thee, fellow pilgrim, I am sure that thou canst do nought else in view of the things which Debater hath accom-lished to the benefit of the inhabitants of the Happy Land of Collegia. And Student, at the great ball which is to be held next year in the council of the Happy Land of Collegia, there shall be need of a capable person to see that the floor be properly covered with wax. I am fully convinced that thou art a most capable person and one of the most outstanding of our latest generation to enter into the Happy Land of Collegia, and that thou art the man for the position. I shall accordingly put in a good word with Debater concerning thee.

STUDENT: I thank thee most heartily, Promisor.

Herbert Reports Wide Interest in St. Mary's Game

Possibility of Football Tilt With Eastern School Gets Attention

The football game which, next to the California-Stanford contest, has drawn the most attention in and around the bay region, is the Oregon-St. Mary's tilt in San Francisco Thanksgiving Day, according to Lieut. George F. Herbert of the local R. O. T. C., who returned this week from the Lettermen's hospital of San Francisco, where he was confined for eight weeks because of serious illness. After the California-St. Mary's game at Berkeley October 5, the Irish have no other important battle between that contest and the one with Oregon, and for that reason they not only will point for the Webfoot mill, but are whooping it up in grand fashion, Lieut. Herbert said.

"If Oregon beats Stanford at Palo Alto October 5, then the Oregon-St. Mary's game will be a complete sell-out before Thanksgiving Day," Herbert remarked. "On the other hand, should Oregon lose, it still is estimated that the game with St. Mary's will draw upwards of 30,000, some of the rabid fans predicting it will be closer to 50,000 than to 30,000. And from what the sportsman say in the south, it should be SOME game."

"Much dissatisfaction has been heard in the bay district over the scheduling of the Oregon-Stanford game at Palo Alto on the same day that California-St. Mary's meet at Berkeley. The Oregon-Stanford game is looked upon as one of the thrillers for the coming season, and inability to take in both games, has caused no little dissatisfaction among the fans. For, while the St. Mary's-California game is always a thrilling battle, it has no bearing on the conference standings, while the Oregon-Stanford tilt should go a long way in naming the next conference champion."

PROMISOR: I prithee, Student, whom art thou supporting for the presidency of the council of the Happy Land of Collegia?
