A Bit of Advice to Tom

"It's easier to plow a straight furrow by sighting ahead than by looking back."—Sayings of Ezra Peck.

TODAY at 11 o'clock Tom Stoddard, newly-elected president of the associated students of the University of Oregon, will officially assume his duties. After being installed by Joe McKeown, retiring president, Stoddard will make a short speech outlining his policies for next year.

With due respect to the virtue of modesty that should be inherent in all newspapers, the Emerald ventures to suggest to Stoddard a few things which he might appropriately incorporate in his proposed policies for next year—a bit of friendly advice to be taken for what it is worth.

In the first place, Tom, why not come out in favor of a drastic revision of the traditions of the campus? Oregon as an institution is assuming a place among the leaders of American universities, is looking forward to bigger things scholastically and intellectually and even athletically, and yet the students cling tenaciously to such antiquated and childish institutions as the frosh parade and the enforcement of traditions by sessions on the library steps. Isn't it time for the students as well as the administration to look forward instead of back into the past?

Another thing, Tom, which the Emerald suggests that you advocate, is the abolition of the compulsory features of the R. O. T. C. unit. Of course you can't do it all by yourself, but in the position which you will hold next year your influence will be considerable. The United States professes to be a peace-loving nation, and yet through such institutions as the R. O. T. C. a military force is being built up that would have been unheard of in the days before the war. Surely the administration of military training to only those students who desire it would be sufficient for the needs of the country.

The last thing the Emerald asks, Tom, is that you try to keep the Oregon students and their representatives on the executive council from becoming too athletically-minded. Oregon is looking forward to a mighty football team next year, to championship tennis and golf and swimming teams, as well as strong teams in other sports. All this is glorious, but we must remember that sports do not make up the whole of college life. There are other things, such as debate, concerts, and lectures which should be supported. In too many universities it has been the tendency, when the athletes rose to heights of glory, for the student body to support inter-collegiate sport to the exclusion of everything else. Try your best to keep Oregon away from that tendency next year, Tom.

As we said before, Tom, this is just a bit of friendly advice to be taken for what it is worth to you. The whole of it could be stumped up in the quotation from the rustic sage which heads this article. Look ahead while plowing your furrow, not backwards.

At the Age Of Thirty-five

THE marks of a college education have been obliterated by the time a graduate becomes 35 years old, is the recent data given out by W. A. Neilson, president of Smith college. His observations were made in smoking compartments of pullmans. Mr. Neilson is at the head of a girls' college, but does not give proof that his investigation included women, one of the important factors in the business life of the nation.

If such is the case, why go to college at all? Why should not the students that graduate from high school go right into the business world, and climb up as so many of our capitalists have, or maybe start at the top, if there is enough influence on our side? Of course, it is sometimes doubtful whether such education pays, but the many failures in life, and the wages paid to college graduates surely shows that one who has higher learning gets the best out of life.

It can be granted that most students forget some of the minor subjects they carried while in college, but as a rule they do not forget the one aim in their lives. If such is the case, why should there be so many students with the ear marks of a higher education? There are some that cannot be distinguished from those raised in the gutter, but there are many more that can be, so why try to prove such a question? —Daily Kansan.

is me, that I should ever be betrayed of the political parties, for both are utterly perfidious by nature. I have been falsely promised honorable posts by both Halfback and Debuter. I have been surely mistreated by the adherents of the Independent ticket while in the service of Debuter and Promisor, and now those personages deign to recognize me not. But worst of all I have tarried here so long, have wasted so much time that I now into affiliating myself with either have entirely lost sight of the spires of the Golden City of Education. I fear me I shall never reach the pearly gates of that metropolis, but nevertheless, I shall be once again upon my way.

Student had progressed but a short distance along his way when he met with Frater and the other members of the house of the Gamma brotherhood, each one bearing a stave and a wrathful countenance. Upon catching sight of Student, Frater shouted: "Behold, there he is. Thou wilt vote against our organizations, wilt thou?"

Whereupon the members of the Gamma guild seized upon Student, and each one struck him across the buttocks with his stave, repeatedly and with full force, each blow causing Student to writhe in agony. When they had done with this sport, they bore him unto the brink of the river and cast him in, and would not suffer him to emerge for many minutes.

When at length Student was allowed to come forth from the water, Frater cometh unto him and removeth the emblem of the Gamma guild from his raiment, saying: "Student, thou hast violated the most sacred tradition of our code in voting according to thy own mind instead of according to the instructions of thy guild. Such a thing is a sacrilege, is without precedent in the annals of our history. For this we are unable to conceive a punishment sufficiently severe, but we hereby eject thee from membership in the house of the Gamma brotherhood of the Happy Land of Collegia. Consider thyself no more as one of our brothers."

Whereupon the members of the Gamma guild quitted Student, leaving him lying prostrate on the brink of the river. When they were out of sight, Student heaved a great sigh, as of relief, arose to his feet, and continued slowly on his way in the direction of the Golden City of Education. (Here Endeth Book VI)

Oregon's Movie Star Has Her Hobbies Too

She admitted it yesterday afternoon, and there wasn't even a flicker of hesitation in the wide black eyes that are one of the reasons why she's the heroine in Oregon's Campus movie.

But here's a glimmer of hope for the Nordic boys. Dot insists that, more than anything else, the man she marries has got to have "a sense of humor."

Dot was in a room on "third" at the Chi Omega house, all curled up in a chair, laughing, hugging her knees and looking much more like a college sophomore than a movie star. For one thing, there was a "sister," a pile of books, a stray shoe and a hot water bottle on the bed. The "sister" had water wave curls in her hair, and Dot was wearing a bathing suit with pink slippers and a figured coat with great spotsches of red and bright colors in it. All that's college.

And before we forget it, there's something peculiar about Dot Burke's eyes. On the screen they flash back at you with "Clara Bow" blackness. But in day time they're dusky blue.

There are a lot of things about movie actresses Dot hasn't acquired yet. She hasn't a poodle, an accent, or a line of bunk about dieting.

Usually when satellites get the reportorial third degree they include their hobbies, former husbands, first loves, favorite actors, superstitions, favorite ice cream and what-not.

Well, Oregon's movies have to be done right, so here they are. The little leading lady of "Green" says her hobbies are dancing, first, and then, for an insignificant second, tennis, for husbands, none. For first loves, well, that is nobody's business but Dorothy's. For superstitions, none, but she does hate to think about having to fall in the mill race for the movie.

And Dolores Del Rio's her favorite movie actress. Portland's her home town, she likes to cook and can make marvelous toasted cheese sandwiches. When she was little she wanted to be in the movies "just like all little kids;" she'd like awfully much to travel; she's always wanted to be a dancer.

Yesterday, Dot was going in the race for the first time this year. And it wasn't just for the fun of it either. She has to fall in, all dressed up, according to the scenario, and she isn't a bit excited about it.

Wine Selected For Emerald Business Staff

Chuck Reed who has acted as advertising manager of the Emerald for the past year, recently resigned from further work on the business staff because of a lack of time to spend on the work during the coming year. Having been just recently elected yell king for the coming year and having several other activities which take time, he feels that he will not be able to continue. His absence from the staff leaves a position hard to fill.

Why one-way Street?

"Well, I'm only goin' one way!" replied the legendary motorist to the amazed John Law. A laudable principle—if applied in the right direction . . . exactly as our long experience in cigarette making assures us that the only avenue to enduring popularity is a one-way street. All the arrows along Chesterfield's route, from plantation to pocket, point directly to taste. No left turns into insipidity—no detours around the plain duty of good tobaccos—to SATISFY. An overdose of analogy, perhaps, but you get our drift: Chesterfields are mild—but mildness is not overdone; they're never flat. Naturally smooth, aromatic tobaccos are so blended that every last atom of their flavor is delivered to the smoker. Here is that very rare bird, a cigarette that does satisfy.
