Speed Homecoming Luncheon

HOMEcoming comes this year on November 16. That is the time for all graduates who can get away from their work to revisit the campus, renew acquaintances, and above all to see Oregon battle Oregon State College on the gridiron.

November 16 is about the dead center of the fall rainy season and a homecoming without a downpour comes about once in a decade—if that often.

When it rains, the annual campus luncheon, for which all students and alumni pay fifty cents, has to be moved into the men's gymnasium or to the Igloo.

As anyone who has attended a typical homecoming luncheon, considerable difficulty is experienced in feeding the immense crowds. Lines of students a block long are forced to await their turn to grab their plate. When the luncheon was moved to the men's gymnasium, shelter was provided for the students only after they got inside. Standing out in the rain in the long lineup was anything but comfortable and kept many away from the traditional feed.

Then the affair was moved to the Igloo and again the line moved so slowly that it stretched for a block outside the building while the co-ed waitresses tried to feed them as fast as they could.

The Emerald has no bone to pick with the idea of having homecoming luncheons. It feels as does Tom Stoddard, student body president, when he said: "Abolish them? Over my dead body!"

The fault lies in the system used to feed the crowds. Without fear of being too hasty, the Emerald recommends the replacing of the present system of dishing up the meal for each student as he files by, to one used at several other schools. Namely, box lunches.

The food need not be prepared any sooner than is usually the case. Instead of dishing up while the luncheon is in progress, the lunches should be put up in pasteboard boxes beforehand and handed to the students who file by.

By doing this, the long lines standing outside the Igloo in the rain will be eliminated for there is practically no time required to hand out a box. The same amount of food may be included in them as was put on the plates and the confusion attendant with serving every luncheon in the past will be cut down. The cost would be no more.

The Igloo will not be taxed to handle the larger crowd of diners who will be eating at one time. Its seating capacity is large enough to accommodate the number who will turn out.

Now is the time to start planning that luncheon. Some arrangement must be made to more quickly serve the homecoming crowds. Box lunches seem to be the solution.

Increase in Study Notable

WHETHER it means anything or not to have the number of students studying at Condon library double that of last year, there are many on the campus who herald it as a good omen.

It may mean that more professors are putting books on reserve shelves. It may mean that the student body is becoming more "study conscious" than in past years, but whatever interpretation is placed on the increased popularity of the library, it points toward a healthy condition in the university.

The pick-'em-up-and-land-'em-down dog-shaking marathon is scheduled for Saturday night. Open house is a tiresome grind to the upperclassmen. Speaking of marathons, we often wonder what the ancient Greeks think of the modern meanings we have attached to their word marathon.

The colleges and universities in the United States cost $250,000,000 annually. Not to mention what the students spend who attend them.

Scientists say that solving cross-word puzzles are little or no value in enlarging the vocabulary. All that pencil lead wasted.

Economists are predicting chain farming as the next step in the world of business progress. That will mean a whole lot more $20-a-week jobs as managers for commerce school degree-holders.

UNITED EUROPE IS SUBJECT OF TALK

"America and the United States of Europe" is the subject to be discussed by Dr. John R. Mez, professor of sociology, at the open meeting of Theta Sigma Phi, national women's journalistic honorary, set for Wednesday evening at 7:45 in Alumni hall.

Refreshments will be served after the meeting. All women journalism majors and wives of members of the school of journalism faculty are invited to attend the meeting, according to Elise Schroeder, president of the local chapter of the society.

John M. Rae to Give Course on Investing

John M. Rae, associate professor of business administration, will teach a night class in "Investments" to Portland business men in the Portland extension division. A course in Investments for women has been scheduled for winter term.

Vesper Services Will be Started Tuesday Evening

Independent Women Will Hold Open House at Y. W. Saturday

"Five o'clocks," as this year's Y. W. C. A. vespers are to be called, will begin next Tuesday afternoon, it was announced at the regular cabinet meeting held last night at the bungalow with Eldress Judd, president, in charge.

Daphne Hughes is director of vespers. Charlotte Brosius is choir director and has been lining up the choir this week after a series of try-outs. Choir members will be announced soon, she said yesterday.

Music, a brief scripture reading, and a period of quiet for meditation and rest are what "five o'clocks" offer campus women. The service lasts about half an hour.

Gracia Haggerty, social chairman, will take charge of the open house which will be held at the bungalow Saturday night for all women who do not live in organizations. Ruth Johnson, Gwen Shepherd and Dorothy Hallin are her assistants. They will arrange for music and will try to get in touch with all Eugene women students who do not have any other way of taking part in open house.

Bess Templeton was introduced to the cabinet last night as the new chairman of finance.

PROFESSORS READ SCIENTIFIC PAPERS

During an extensive summer trip, Professors W. E. Milne and D. R. Davis of the university mathematics department attended the meeting of the American Mathematical Society, which was held at the University of Colorado at Boulder late in August.

While at Boulder, both professors read papers concerning their researches in mathematics. Professor Davis spoke on the "Integrata Whose Extremals Are a 2 n-Parameter Family of Curves," and "Determining Integrata Whose Extremals Are Parabolas."

Professor Milne spoke on "The Degree of Convergence of Expansions in an Infinite Interval." Milne's paper will appear in one of the coming issues of the "Transactions of the American Mathematical Society."

Invitations to Dad's Day Fete Sent by Editor

Students Urged to Send Special Invitations To Their Dads

Leonard Hagstrom, university editor, sent out the first group of letters yesterday to the parents of students inviting them to attend the annual Dad's day event. Much encouragement has been felt by the enthusiastic way in which the Dads are already answering the invitations of their sons and daughters.

All the faculty and student committees are working together to make this annual event a greater success than it has ever been before.

Speakers who have been around to the different fraternity and sorority houses urging the students to write home to their parents were: Gladys Clausen, Beatrice Milligan, Katherine Langenberg, Elizabeth Blew, Barbara Mann, Harriet Kibbee, Mary Ellen Foley, Reba Brogden, Stan Brooks, John Yerkovich, Art Potwin, Barney Miller, and Robert Miller. Those who haven't written home yet are again requested to ask their Dads to make arrangements to be down for the Dad's day week-end.

A little competitive spirit is to be awakened between the fraternities and sororities on the campus as to some individual decorative features in keeping with the Dad's day signs. However, no specific decision has been made, according to Donald Call, who is in charge of campus decorations.
