WOMEN'S FLASHLIGHT SCARES INTRUDERS

Frances Elizabeth Baker, head of physical education in the Eugene public schools, piled a few belongings into Miss Baker's Ford this summer and started out on a three weeks' gypsying expedition through the Pacific northwest.

The above incident occurred at Hood's canal on the Olympic peninsula. They camped out under the sky at points of scenic beauty all through the region—Crescent Lake, Mora, and Lake Quinalt. They were almost overtaken by a forest fire along the Straight of Juan de Fuca and got out of a forest reserve where they had innocently camped near Coquille. And they fished in the most famous fishing lake in Washington, Quinalt, and didn't even get a nibble!

"We saw all the most beautiful spot in the Olympic peninsula and en route," said Miss Hair in summing up her account of the trip's adventures, "but Miss Baker and I decided that the most beautiful bit of scenery on the whole trip was the ocean road between Tillamook and Newport in our own state of Oregon."

A slicker that stands the gaff . . .

THE fellow who first called a Fish Brand Slicker "The Rainy Day Pal" said something. A pal stands by you through thick and thin. That's one of the points college men always make when they talk to us about Fish Brand Slickers. They're weather-proof and comfortable after long years of service.

Buy yourself a real Fish Brand "Varsity" or "Topper" model, and you'll have a slicker for keeps. A. J. Tower Company, Boston, Mass.

Many American prints are offered for free distribution, while a good number of excellent Italian prints, imported last year from Florence, Italy, by Mrs. McClain, may be rented for 10 cents a month. Several of the pictures are now being displayed on the new bulletin board near the circulation desk.

ters, vile odors, poor food, when they have any at all.
Mr. Faner found the renowned Greenwich Village no longer the center of reputable artists and writers. It is more a place for the "hangers-on," who give the "country boys" thrills by their studio parties. The whole set is extremely unmoral, and have an utter disregard of conventions. Prohibition enforcement is a grave problem in New York, for liquor is plentiful.
