We Hope They Noticed

YESTERDAY and Monday the University of Oregon campus was honored by its first official visit of the newly created state board of higher education, which now administers the affairs of this institution, as well as of the Oregon Agricultural college and the three state teachers' colleges. The new board, we read in yesterday's Emerald, inspected the campus buildings, was taken on a tour of the scenic spots of Eugene, was entertained at a banquet at the new men's dormitory, and then moved on to Corvallis to inspect the campus there.

The Emerald ventures to express the hope that the members of the administrative board did not fail to notice several things during their short stay on the campus. We hope that they took special note of the antiquated main library building with its hopelessly insufficient space for the more than 200,000 volumes that it now contains. We hope that they strolled over to the Condon reserve between 8 and 9 o'clock Monday evening and noted that modern but inadequate library and the adjacent laboratories, hallways and cloak rooms crowded to overflowing with students who wished to study but could not find seating space. We hope that they then visited the other libraries maintained at the school of law and at the Commerce building.

And now we hope that the board of education will do something about it. The members should realize that the present library building was built to accommodate a student body of 500, and that now its facilities are stretched to accommodate more than six times that many. They should realize that the division of the reserves into four different buildings results in untold loss of efficiency both on the part of the students and the library administration. They should realize that the most economical program is to erect a modern library building of sufficient size to accommodate the present student body and with provision made for additions when they shall be needed.

We hope the board of education noticed these things on their visit here. In fact, we don't see how they could help but notice them. The principal danger is that the impression will be effaced by the clamor from the Benton county metropolis, as has so often been the case of the state legislature.

Student Body on Trial

SATURDAY will see a student hegira to Portland on board the rally train for the express purpose of cheering Oregon on to greater efforts against the Idaho Vandals at Multnomah stadium.

The week-end in the metropolis is usually in the nature of a "good-time" excursion and Oregon students have been known in the past to indulge in practices which nearly brought about the cancellation of all Portland football games.

Warnings are again broadcast by the university administration and student body officials that any public display of drinking will automatically bring about the cancellation of rally trains to Portland in future years.

Since the only insight that thousands of Portland people get into the university life is from what they see once a year when Oregon students go north for a football game, the necessity of making this an impression of a correct nature cannot be overemphasized.

The Emerald does not take a dictatorial stand and say "Thou shalt not!" There is a better way of gaining a point than that. It only seeks to point out the disastrous results which will follow if the dictums of the university are not heeded.

College students are expected to conduct themselves in the manner of college students at all times. College, it must be pointed out, is not a sort of temple shining on a hill, but represents a cross-section of the communities from which the students come. We believe the Oregon student body represents a high class of Oregon citizenry and that its conduct when away from the limits of the college will be above public reproach.

The first national conference on birth control is to be held in New York in November, when the American Birth Control League launches its work to limit and better the world's population. It will be interesting to watch a storm of protests from Tartuffes about the country.

"High school stuff" best describes the activities of the sophomore who threw eggs at the frosh during the inauguration Saturday afternoon. College men do not indulge in such practices.

School authorities in Portland have trouble finding parking space for high school cars. Maybe those rush week cars were pledges' property.

When Aimee again takes the burden of publicity from "Ma's" shoulders we have another example of filial solicitude.

Burrell Has Article Printed in Magazine

"Operating Cost of Master Plumbers in Oregon for 1928," a research made by Professor O. K. Burrell of the business administration school, and put out last spring, has been reprinted in the Western Plumbing and Heating Journal for June, July, and August. Articles in the July issues of "Domestic Engineering" and the "Plumbers Trade Journal" have drawn from and incorporated the research in a manner instructive to plumbers over the United States.
