Team Will Hold "Open House" Washington Real Threat Now Trojans Play Notre Dame ...

By Harry Van Dine

THE varsity football team and coaching staff will be hosts to the student body and faculty this afternoon in a general football "open house."

WAS the great fight Washington made against Stanford the Huskies' last stand? The question is burning up the conference and it has Nils Price laying awake nights trying to figure out just how much of a battle his California Bears are in for next Saturday when they clash with the Huskies.

OF COURSE, the Cards went to Seattle with the idea that they had the game all sewed up, but at more than one stage of the game old Warner scratched his head and wondered what the Huskies would do next.

AT PRESENT the California Bears are considered among the greatest teams in the country, but that their much heralded defense could be broken through was proven by the lowly Montana Grizzlies, when Major Milburne's men scored two touchdowns against the Bears.

SOUTHERN California treks halfway across the country to meet the strong Notre Dame eleven on Soldiers' field in Chicago. This game will go a long way towards determining the national champion as both teams are still considered in the running.

WASHINGTON State will continue on its way to the top of the Northwest conference teams with a game with Montana. The Cougars have a great team this year and should win handily over the Grizzlies.

Frosh Gridders Start Work for Second Rook Tilt

Fumbles Robbed Yearlings Of Scoring Chances At Medford

A disappointed, but otherwise uninjured, freshman football team indulged in a workout last night that was still going strong when the ball could not longer be seen.

He added, after some persuasion, that the Frosh aided in their own defeat with fumbles, coming at the most crucial moments possible. The first occurred on the three yard line after a sustained march, following the opening kick-off, had carried the ball to this point.

Statistical reports do not win games but they do show the relative strength of any two teams; it is therefore interesting, in view of the fact that the Frosh take another crack at the Rooks, that they made 19 first downs to their opponents 9.

There are now only two more practice sessions before the second of the series, the game being scheduled for November 15. That the Yearlings will make the best of this time is a foregone conclusion as they feel more they were too big a help to the Rooks at Medford and are looking forward to meeting Coach Newman's eleven again as it is their one opportunity to atone in some measure for their loss down south.

Today Final Chance for Public Drill

Third String To Imitate Beavers; Will Wear White Jerseys

McEwan Not To Risk Men In Scrimmage

Today the public will have the last chance to see the varsity in action before the O. S. C. game Saturday. The big open scrimmage and workout to be held this afternoon around 3:30 is open to everyone, and McEwan especially invites the faculty to the exhibition. The Oregon band, also, is to be on hand.

For over a week the third string has been working on the Aggie formations and plays as they have been taught to them by Oregon scouts.

This imitation Beaver outfit will wear white jerseys with numbers on them corresponding to those on the backs of the Orangemen themselves.

Third String Listed

The third string lineup is Edwards, 40, end; Lucas, 15, tackle; Heyden, 31, guard; Carter, 35, center; French, 7, guard; Hall, 43, tackle; Bailey, 32, end; Neveau, 49, half; Spear, 42, half; Shearer, 24, quarter; and Johnson, 44, full.

This tallies with an O. S. C. combination lined up somewhat as follows: McKalip, Stout, Englestead, Geddes, Thompson, Byington, and Striff, line; and Sherwood, Owens, Buerke, and Gilmore, backs.

Chances are that there will be a real stiff scrimmage between the first two teams and the third string but it is hardly probable that McEwan will allow his men to take too many risks.

Paul Schissler, the State coach, is using a very attractive looking offense this year, similar to Idaho's in that the whole line sort of hop steps and jumps into position just before the ball is snapped, but different from Idaho's in that the players count out loud to heighten the rhythmic effect. That's the way the Chemawa Indians do, and it is quite possible that the Beavers have borrowed this feature from their little neighbors.

One of the good points in the method of attack is that it permits the team to get set into unbalanced formations quick enough to catch the opponents off guard, and the vicious counting, aside from helping run the plays smooth, is calculated to have a small degree of mental effect on the defensive line.

O. S. C. has a lot of extra-fancy trick and reverse plays, and it is a cinch that these will be more valuable with the whole team hip-hipping around just before the plays are started.

If they are like Oregon, the Aggies will have been saving up stuff all season to spring next Saturday, so it can not be expected that the third string will be able to expose everything the Beavers are likely to use in the game.

Basketball Men Placed on Squads By Bill Reinhart

Barn - Storming Trip Is Being Set for Holidays

With two weeks of varsity basketball practice on the fundamentals of floor work and handling the ball past, the shaping of a smooth working basketball machine is beginning to form.

There has been no real scrimmage as yet, but Head Coach Bill Reinhart has divided the squad of about twenty-five men into groups to work in passing the ball down the floor and working it under the basket. Jean Eberhardt, letterman of last year, is working in at center on the first five. Horner, letterman of last year; and Olinger, last year varsity reserve, are the forwards. Hughes, varsity reserve of last year, and Calkins are the guards. On the second line-up there is Levoff at center, Keenan and Stevens forwards, Bell and Clark guards. These men have not been named definitely to these positions, but are working there because of their experience last year.

Bill Reinhart has some plans for a barnstorming trip, during the Christmas holidays, into California, but is not certain that the trip will be made unless three or four more games are added to the schedule. Those games that are already arranged for are with Yuba County Junior college, State Teachers college at Chico, College of Pacific at Stockton, and Santa Clara.

The practices have been going along smoothly with the exception of an injury to Hal Waffle's knee which was wrenched in scrimmages in floor work fundamentals.
