Exaggerated Squawls

"IT'S TIME TO CALL A HALT" proclaims the Oregon State Barometer in a two-column front page editorial Tuesday morning. The Barometer specifically refers to the conduct of the University of Oregon supporters at the Oregon-O. S. C. football game at Hayward field Saturday.

Oregon students, the Barometer believes, are a pretty hard bunch, an outfit without the least element of sportsmanship, a gang of rough-necks who pelt the O. S. C. bench with apple cores and blatantly strive to embarrass and humiliate their rivals from Corvallis.

Such severe criticism of the Oregon student body is embarrassing, especially so inasmuch as it has a small element of justification. It must be admitted that there were apple cores heaved out of the Oregon stands Saturday, and that a few of them came as far as the bench on which the Orange players were seated, but the Barometer is badly mistaken in assuming that such conduct was sanctioned or approved by student or University officials. A group of inebriated persons not connected with the University who were occupying the Oregon rooting section were responsible for most of the throwing, as far as can be determined.

In regard to the other incidents mentioned in the voluminous editorial effusion, it is the opinion of the Emerald that the Barometer is displaying an altogether too-willing critical attitude. We could explain at some length that the bass drum in the case is one of the famed trophies of Oregon which is always trotted out at Homecoming, much as is the plaster beaver at Corvallis; that the Oregon State rosters were allotted relatively the same sections Saturday as the Oregon supporters were given at Corvallis last year; that the comic band was merely a bit of innocent asaninity which ragged Oregon as well as O. S. C. songs; and that the rally preceding the Homecoming game was entirely an Oregon party and was not staged for the benefit of Orange supporters. We might also add that the conduct of the Corvallis students has not been impossible to attack in years past.

But such explanation is probably useless. The Oregon State students are doubtlessly feeling much better by this time for having humiliated Oregon on paper, after the Aggie team had failed to do so on the gridiron.

Oregana a Money-Making Proposition?

SOMEONE won a skirmish in the battle of the Oregana editor's and manager's salary, but it is difficult to judge just who it was. The executive council last evening accepted the finance committee's recommendation that the editor and the manager be paid each twenty-five per cent out of the first thousand dollars profit from the book. Out of the next thousand they will get ten per cent.

Under the old rule of a year ago the Oregana heads got $100 each out of the first $200 profit. So it seems that the change which was made practically restates the previous constitutional clause. It is admitted, however, that the new amendment will tend to fire the editor and manager with a desire to amass profits in order that there will be remuneration for them. The Emerald does not believe the yearbook should be looked at as a money-making source. As the price now each student who has his picture in it a time or two will pay from $7.50 to $9 by the time he buys a book and pays for the pictures and his share on the house panel.

When the publications committee's special investigation, launched this week, is completed, it is to be hoped that a small guarantee will be recommended for the editor and manager so that if the book is a success and just pays for itself financially, which it has seldom done recently, the yearbook heads will not be several hundred dollars in debt and their year's work wasted. The time is coming when students will not be willing to do this work on a gamble that there will be profits.

Over in the men's gymnasium is an old trophy case, full of footballs, silver cups won by Oregon track champions, pennants and plaques—trophies of the athletic field telling of past glories won by the University. A much more fit place for these to be displayed, a place where they would really be on display, would be in the Igloo. At a small expense the student body could build a trophy case and store these relics there so that all might see them. When a Student Union building is built, they can be moved to newer quarters.

The practice of freshman classes in past years of buying expensive sweaters for the many athletes who play on their class teams should be discontinued. The class, as a whole, should buy them numerals, however. Last year the freshmen spent $300 on sweaters. Some recognition should be given to the athletes, but when a bulky amount like that is spent, it is getting too near the class of what Oregon does for its varsity teams.

The Illinois supreme court ruled recently that fraternities are charitable and educational institutions and therefore exempt from any state taxation. Well, that solves the problem in our minds about just what fraternities were.

"I Loved Her"
I loved her, how I loved her!
She was my joy and pride—
I wept full many a bitter tear
That sad day she died.
I loved her, Gawd how I loved her!

And the years have passed, yet now,
I mourn when're I think of her—
My lovely Jersey cow.

Now altogether, boy, give three jeers for Oregon State's new yell: "BREAK THAT LEG."

By yesterday's headlines we see PORTLAND TO DRESS FOR HAWAIIAN TILT
But they won't have to wear much . . . ??????

I say, boy, will you page Mr. Conan Doyle or Dr. Conklin. Shades of dead authors are frequenting the campus. Oscar Wilde phoned a Chi Omega freshman Wednesday and asked her to announce the presentation of the "Importance of Being Earnest" to her sisters. Betty Jones, the freshman, rushed to the pigger's guide to search for Oscar's name. THE SODA JERKER.
