

Dr. Mez To Attend Institute Of International Relations To Advance World Peace Cause

Topic To Be Presented by Professor, 'Limitation Of Armament'

Representatives To Meet At Riverside, Cal.

Professor John R. Mez, of the political science department of the University of Oregon, will leave for California soon to attend the 1929 session of the annual Institute of International Relations.

Dr. R. B. Von KleinSmid, president of the University of Southern California and chancellor of the Institute, has announced that the session will meet at the Mission Inn, Riverside, California, December 8-13.

Professor Mez is one of the delegates from the western universities and colleges who will appear on the program of this session; and while there he will present the topic: "Freedom of the Seas and Limitation of Armament."

The main aim of the institute as stated by Dr. von KleinSmid is to advance the cause of world peace by supplementing facilities for the dissemination of accurate, scientific knowledge of international affairs, coupled with the promotion of better world relations and the attainment of universal good will.

The institute is also an attempt to provide the people of the Pacific coast opportunities for instruction and discussion as are provided for the people of the Atlantic coast through the Institute of Politics at Williamstown, Mass.

Lectures Planned
This year's program is to be presented through evening lectures, open to the public as well as to delegates and members, with national and international figures as speakers; afternoon conferences, and morning round-table discussions.

Questions to be discussed at the session cover the subjects of: Agencies for International Understanding, International Communication and Trade, International Government, Labor and International Policies, League of Nations, The Orient, Public Opinion and International Policies, University Programs and Foreign Students, and several other similar topics.

U. S. C. Executive Office
The University of Southern California has been designated as the executive office of the institute until the actual session opens, when the program will be held at Riverside, California.

This is the fifth session of the Annual Institute of International Relations.

ONTHANK, EARLY EDITOR, TELLS OF EXPERIENCES

lier's financial genius we made money on it."

Andrew Collier, now a leading business man of Klamath Falls and a member of the state legislature, was manager of the Oregonian when Onthank was editor. He also managed the Emerald when the executive secretary pushed the blue pencil.

The university was rather different then. There was an enrollment of about eight hundred, and the only buildings on the south side of 13th street were the president's residence and Mary Spiller hall, which had just been completed.

The football stadium used to occupy the space on the south side of 13th street west of the site of the administration building. After a good hard rain the field was something of a mess. "It was almost necessary to apply first aid methods to resuscitate the fellow who was on the bottom of a pile of players," Mr. Onthank remarked, "because he generally was below the water level of the field. Those were the days when officials would argue for a couple of hours before a game about the eligibility of the players. In the meantime the players were ready to chew nails."

Many of the traditions which we have been regarding as ancient as the university are not so, according to Mr. Onthank. "The underclass mix which was abolished this year was originated the year I was junior. The Oregon seal in front of Willard hall was put in later. The senior bench came about the same time. My class left the fountain which is used for ducking purposes on junior week-end."

Mr. Onthank studied engineering for the first three years he was in school here; he switched to education, and graduated with French as his major.

Douglass Buys New Books With Student Levies

Many New Volumes Added To Shelves Since September

Oregon Library Is Rated Among Nation's Best

University students paid $1,476.53 last year in fines, and 711 books were bought with the money. The average amount spent on each new book was $2.07.

There has been a total of 2990 new books added since the opening day of school this fall, September 23. The last additions were received yesterday, 27 volumes of Germania with two supplementary volumes, and some old issues of the New York Herald Tribune, dating between 1843 and 1846.

Many Books Owned
The library now owns 196,384 books, pamphlets, maps, pictures, and periodicals. That is enough, if divided, to give each student on the campus 65.4 books apiece. Compared to other universities in the United States, Oregon ranks 25th in number of books. The Harvard library ranks first with 2,784,500. Yale is second with 1,902,512, and Columbia university ranks third with 1,132,236. The Harvard library is 14 times as large as the Oregon library.

Douglass Here 21 Years
M. H. Douglass, librarian, has been working for the library for almost 21 years. He said that 20 years ago there were 16,000 volumes in the library, and in the 1928 annual report, there were 193,398 books listed, representing an increase of 1108 per cent over a period of 20 years.

The "old libe," minus the stacks, in 1908, housed besides the library, the economics, political science, history, rhetoric, and correspondence departments. Now the library has the addition of the stacks, and is scattered in nine different buildings on the campus. Quite a difference! The enrollment then was 644, and last year the enrollment was 3,128, 48 times as many students now as then.

More Time To Study Now
The students in the old days had better excuses for not having their lessons on time, if these figures mean anything. The "libe" in 1908, was open only 47 3/4 hours a week, and now it is open 94 1/2 hours in the course of a week. This shows that students should have 98 per cent more time to get better grades, for the increase was that much in the number of hours the library was open per week.

In 1908, the library received 10.3 per cent of the university's total income, in 1928 it had gone down, receiving only 9.3 per cent of the income. The amount expended for books, periodicals, and binding during the 20 years of Mr. Douglass' sojourn, as librarian, was $310,000.

G. S. Turnbull Gets More Office Space

As a result of changes made in the Journalism building during Thanksgiving vacation George S. Turnbull, of the journalism faculty, now is occupying a larger office than formerly.

The changes consisted in removing a partition between Mr. Turnbull's former office and a small room used chiefly for magazine files, and combining the two into one room, forming the present office.

AT THE McDONALD—
Young romance more gripping than "Seventh Heaven," more touching than "Street Angel," that's "Lucky Star," Janet Gaynor's and Charles Farrell's latest co-starring attraction. Both Miss Gaynor and Farrell have tender young voices that give more than ever an impression of youth to their work.

AT THE REX—
One of the best horror stories yet appearing as a "Talkie" thriller is "The Mysterious Dr. Fu Manchu" at the Rex. It is hair raising all the way through, and the rise to climactic culmination unusual and truly artistic.

AT THE NEW HEILIG—
Norma Talmadge, whose list of cinema triumphs is almost unbroken, again appears in "The Woman Disputed" at the new Heilig. Of course every woman, co-ed or otherwise likes to be sought and fought over, but it takes the glorious Norma to give lessons in love.

AT THE COLONIAL—
Norman Kerry comes to the Colonial today to star in "Trial Marriage." The title gives everything away so what's the use of broadcasting? We wonder though if a Scotchman wrote that story.

AT THE STATE—
Marriage is a popular topic with screen folk for the State is offering "Half Marriage." Now what do you suppose that is?
