EVERY kind of weather imaginable was encountered by the ex-Oregon mentor on his trip. Most of the time the weather was just the reverse of that which would have been expected for the locality. For instance, it was very cold, with a storm breaking in New Orleans. Rather unusual as the Californians would say. It really was warm in California at that. By the time the team reached Atlenta, Georgia, for a workout another surprise was in store for them. It was so cold that the field was actually frozen, believe it or not. The heat encountered at Miami more than made up for the coldness encountered on the way. The Webfoots simply sweltered in

COURSES STUDIED

At the meeting of Sigma Xi, science honorary, last night, a round-table discussion was carried on as to the relative merit of having a special list handle each science branch, in the science survey course, and of having all branches presented by one instructor. The question of the value of the survey course was also brought up, as was that of their place in the "group" system, whereby each student fulfills requirements in certain major class-

THE Oregon players acted a gentleman at all times, Mc-Ewan declared, and sometimes the southern people were surprised to see football players conduct themselves in such excellent fashion. The men were very courteous; and Cap says they were a group of which any coach would be proud. At no time did any of the attention go to their heads, and they were very good salesmen for Oregon and the Pacific northwest. No better good will ambassadors could have been found than Oregon's football team. McEwan declared that few people out Ruth Dundore, and Dorothy Dunhere realized the tremendous amount of favorable publicity which the state and University received as a result of the trip.
