

Mrs. A. L. Beck Will Speak In Spokane Soon

Plans To Attend National Conference in Chicago Next Month

Music Instructor To Visit Kansas City Schools

An important part in music conferences of nation-wide scope will be taken by Anne Landsbury Beck, head of the public school music department, this spring, it was learned yesterday.

Mrs. Beck, who is one of 14 national directors of the Music Supervisors' National conference, will attend that meeting in Chicago, March 24-28, reporting for the Northwest division, which she represents.

On April 19, Mrs. Beck will speak before the Inland Empire Education association at Spokane on "The Private Teacher and the Public School Music Supervisor."

Describes Meeting

Mrs. Beck was vice-president of the Northwest division of the national conference last year, and was one of two music educators instrumental in effecting the Northwest organization. She describes the national conference, which she attended at its last meeting, two years ago, as a most important body in the growth of public school music, setting, as it does, policies of instructors. She anticipates the discussion of the importance of tests and measurements as an outstanding topic to come before this year's session.

Will Be Guest

The faculty member will stop in Kansas City on her way east, visiting the Kansas City schools as the guest of Mabelle Glenn, president of the music supervisor conference, head of public school music in that city.

National recognition has been given Mrs. Beck in recent music publications for her work in public school music on this campus. Authorities have rated the department sixth in the United States.

Emerald To Have All Men's Edition Next Thursday

Contest With Women To Be Judged by Teachers, Tugman, Jenkins

The jury to judge the contest between the men's Emerald and the women's Emerald will include Frank Jenkins, editor of the Eugene Register, and William Tugman, managing editor of the Eugene Guard, as well as journalism professors, according to Eric W. Allen, dean of the school of journalism. "We want some active newspaper men to act with the jury; and these are men whom the students know and whose opinions they respect," said Dean Allen.

In regard to this "battle of the sexes" which will reach its climax next week with the publication of an all-men's Emerald, Dean Allen stated it as his belief that having an all-man paper represented the culmination of feminism. "Every paper and practically every business has its 'woman's day,' but to have a man's day seems to prove the importance that women have obtained in the business."

EMERALD STORY QUERIED

To the Editor: I like to call in question a few statements which are contained in your article announcing the publication of our second issue of Socks From Socrates in today's Emerald.

First, we do not know what connotation you give to the word tabloid, which has come to imply scurrilous journalism.

Second, a paper anonymously published is not a paper illegally published, therefore, there were no violations involved. The main reason for deciding to publish the names was that it would be considered discourteous towards the student administration not to do so.

Third, the writer of the article seemingly does not know the difference between critical and radical.

Fourth, why do you imply the threat that the publishers might be prosecuted for libel?

I consider it very ungenerous on your part to bring out a short article containing four derogatory implications: tabloid, illegality, radicalism and libel, without even a word as to the contents of the paper.

PROFESSORS REMARK ON LONDON CONFERENCE

(Continued from Page One) him. So he has found himself in a vicious triangle. France has been frankly nationalistic and aggressive. On the other hand, America has long professed to be devoted to peace. So it looks as if we are keeping up our double life. We have talked about Hague conferences and signed Kellogg pacts but in the second Hague conference we prevented prohibition of poison gas. We failed to join the league of nations and we refused to scrap our battleships. To any foreign critic this must look like a pious contrast between lip service and action.

A similar view of the situation is taken by Eric W. Allen, dean of the school of journalism, who is regarded as a most thorough and thoughtful follower of the press.

That Holiday Spirit

Every so often you get "that holiday spirit" and want to go and enjoy yourself, and have a grand time in general. When such an impulse strikes you, the Howard Dining Room is just the place to go. There'll be no uncertainty or doubt about it... you just know you'll enjoy yourself.

The howard Dining Room Phone 11-F-30

The dean questions very strongly whether the American activities in the conference merit the praise they have received in the nation's newspapers. "Just what are we actually doing?" he asked.

Speaking more generally on the significance of the conference, Professor DeCou said he did not regard the upset of the Tardieu ministry as anything more than an unfortunate delay.

"What the conference looks toward is this—gradual reduction to the point where the navy will be an international police force. The powers seem pretty much agreed to call a naval holiday in building of battleships for the next six years. If the peace spirit grows they will very likely do away with battleships entirely."

Mr. DeCou thinks it very significant that McDonald declared Great Britain ready to abolish the building of battleships if the powers would do the same. He notes the strong tendency since the World War toward open negotiations in place of a secret diplomacy, and the increasing importance of public opinion as rosy factors toward world peace. He thinks the Kellogg-Briand peace pact has shown its significance in the reduction of demands for cruisers. Mr. DeCou suggested that action on naval reduction may lead to great influence on land disarmament.

"The whole question is the most vital one in the world today," he asserted, pointing out that between 80 and 90 per cent of the government's expenditure goes for war costs of the past and war preparedness for the future. "The question is tremendously important simply from the viewpoint that all this money could be used for other things; education, for example," the mathematics professor said.

McDonald—"The Love Parade."
Rex—"The Lone Star Ranger."
State—"Sailor's Holiday."
Colonial—"The Saturday Night Kid."
Heilig—"Tiger Rose."

Cinderella had nothing on Jeanette McDonald, Chevalier's leading lady of "The Love Parade." Miss McDonald has the tiniest feet in Hollywood, wearing size two and one-half "A" slipper.

"The Love Parade" is a very international affair for: the story is by a Hungarian; the libretto is by an American; the lyrics are by an Englishman; a Frenchman is starred; a German directs.

Tully Marshall has an interesting time with cabbages in "Tiger Rose."

"Sailor's Holiday" has more than a few surprises.

Clara Bow departs from her straight flapper role in "The Saturday Night Kid."

"The Lone Star Ranger" is not so all alone after all.

February Issue Of 'Old Oregon' Comes Out Today

'Doc' Spears Feature of Alumni Paper for This Month

The February issue of "Old Oregon," alumni magazine, is off the press and ready for delivery today, announced Miss Jeannette Calkins, editor.

The feature of this month's edition is "Doc Spears." There is an article called "Oregon's New Football Coach," by William S. Gibson, editor of the Minnesota Alumni Weekly, another by Alexander Brown named "All Portland Will Greet Dr. Spears" and yet another by Wilfred Brown, University student, entitled "The Skeptics Are Fooled."

Dr. Spears has also made his appearance on the cover, which is an enlarged movie negative taken of Dr. Hall and him at the time they were in Missoula, Montana. The picture was taken by George Godfrey, and was clipped from a movie which has been shown in various parts of the state. Movie negatives, says Miss Calkins, are especially hard to enlarge and this one had to be sent to Portland for the process.

There is also a story in this number by Ray Bethers, who is traveling in Europe, called "In the Land of the Bretons." Mr. Bethers has contributed other articles also to "Old Oregon" and illustrates them himself. He tells many interesting things about Breton, says Miss Calkins, one of which is, that the bread of the people is very tough and sometimes four feet long.

Reinhardt Writing Last Part of Book

Publishers Put in Request For Another Manuscript

Dr. J. M. Reinhardt, assistant professor of sociology, is just completing the manuscript for a book on "Principles and Methods of Sociology," which he has written in collaboration with Dr. G. R. Davies, statistician of the University of Iowa. The contract for this book was signed more than a year ago with the Prentice-Hall, Inc., publishers.

According to present plans the book will go to press about May. The contract called for completion of the manuscript in November, but the authors requested that the publishers withhold the publication until the spring of 1930 in order that some advance figures from the 1930 census could be included, according to Dr. Reinhardt.

Prentice-Hall has invited Dr. Reinhardt to prepare another manuscript in the field of poverty and dependency.
