University Debate Scroll Discovered

Plaque Will Be Engraved With Names To Date

When Walter E. Hempstead Jr. was prowling about in the little-visited room 18 in the main library the other day, he ran across the Forensic Scroll of Honor, a copper scroll engraved with the names of outstanding University orators and debaters. The scroll was donated to the University by Robert W. Prescott, '08, at present in the real estate business in Eugene.

The scroll contains the names of those debaters and speakers who represented the University for at least three years, and date from 1914 to 1918. Since 1918, none of the names have been engraved on the scroll, but they will be brought up to date, according to Hempstead.

The scroll will now hang in the speech division office or in the lower part of the main library where all may see it.

Lidberg Battles Parisian Perils

Ex-Oregon Man Studies Art in Europe

"A Portrait Painter in Paris or Living on $20 a Month in Montmartre" might be the title of a story which Clarence C. Lidberg, ex-'29, could write after his first year studying art in France.

Lidberg, in a letter to fraternity brothers of Sigma Pi Tau, tells of arriving in France last summer with only $20 to ward the wolf from the door. He spread that over one month but declared "never again." Before long money from his portrait work, for which he was well-known on the campus, began to come in and a scholarship or two helped him through his education at the Fountainebleau school.

During his study abroad Lidberg has found time to travel in Germany and reports that beer is fine in Germany, but in France it's wine. After finishing up his course he plans to return to the state in the fall. Lidberg did considerable pastel sketching and oil painting on the campus, drawing a large portrait of Burt Brown Barker for last year's Oregonian. He financed his college education at Oregon in the major portion by his art work.

Pianist and Soprano Present Interesting Musical Recital

There was another of the interesting spring term student recitals at the school of music auditorium last night when Lavina Honey, pianist, appeared in graduate recital. This is Mrs. Honey's sixth year at the school of music and her capably played program last night was a worthy testimony to years of intensive study. Esther Saager, soprano, was the assisting musician.

Beethoven comprised Mrs. Honey's opening group. She played the adagio sostenuto from sonata, op. 27, No. 2, with much depth of tone and expression. The Turkish March from "The Ruins of Athens" she played with nicely marked rhythm and lightness. The Beethoven rondo, arranged by Kreisler, was an interesting thing.

For her second group Mrs. Honey played from the romantics, among them Chopin and Liszt. She completed the group with the Brahms rhapsody No. 2. Mrs. Honey's final group was modern, including the delicate "Little Shepherd," of Debussy, to which she gave nice shading.

Miss Saager sang two Italian songs, one from the 17th and one from the 18th century, and two of Schumann's songs. Her singing has much emotion and the quality of her voice is full, pleasing, and nicely controlled. Miss Saager is most pleasing in her appearance before an audience.

Mrs. Honey is the student of Jane Thacher, while Miss Saager is the voice student of Mme. Rose McGrew.
