Splitting the Ballot

TODAY is election day on the Oregon campus, and student voters and politicians are agog with excitement. The ballots are printed and are ready to be marked. Each of the two political factions has lined up its ticket and is ready for the verdict of the voters. All will soon be over but the proverbial shouting.

There is a lot of sport in an election day, and there is also a lot of nonsense. There are many fallacies which have grown up during the years past, but none so great as that it is proper to vote a straight ticket. That there are political parties in student government is to be regretted. Where there are not more than 3,200 voters it is altogether practical for an election to be decided on individual qualifications rather than political affiliations. But there are political parties, and their existence cannot be ignored.

But the intelligent and thoughtful student in today's election will disregard party lines when he marks his ballot. He may have had the opportunity of knowing the men and women best qualified for the executive posts, and he will mark his ballot according to individualities. He will realize that personal initiative is the most important element in an ideal democratic government, and that political factions tend to stifle the personal initiative.

Barleycorn's Move Next

AFTER a siege of prohibition polls being collected by a dozen or two colleges and universities around the nation, the collegiate world, particularly the presidents and moguls of morals, has just begun to subside and sit back in its chair.

But now comes along another poll. This time it's the College Humor that wants to know what college students think of prohibition and it is conducting (so it says) a nation-wide ballot to see whether the He-She gin jokes it prints are really true of college or representative of some lower strata.

Just what can be accomplished with all the figures being compiled is vague unless the wets want them as evidence that the nation is wet and then demand a revoke on the Volstead amendment. The colleges, where there are many who pride themselves in being broad-minded, have been the hotbed of polls and in most cases have shown a decided damp tendency.

It would seem the time has come for something to be done with all these results. They have been spread on the nation's press, the public has been duly shocked at collegiate cocktailism, and now one wonders what it was all for. The next move seems to be the wets'. They may either use the wet-dry poll results to campaign for repeal or they may let the rain of ballots sink in the parched aridity that is the United States in the hopes of propagandizing the citizenry into dissatisfaction with the present regime.

Maine's Drinking Song

HEIDELBERG has been famed as a university where hearty students thump steins of beer on the table and sing robust marching songs, but it now has a formidable competitor in the American field in this line. And, strangely, this same rival is the university of the first dry state in the United States.

Just why this song of Maine's, sung for 26 years locally, should suddenly leap into national prominence overnight is somewhat of a mystery. True, Rudy Vallee revived it, but there is nothing about troubadors or vagabond lovers in it and is anything but Vallee-esque transplanting shouting chords and swing for low crooning and saxophone hokum.

But catch on it has—despite Mr. Vallee and not because of him. After 26 years of hermitage in the Maine woods, it has swept the country and is now sounding through concert hall, radio loud-speaker, and phonograph record. Originally played by Vallee as a "plug" song, the piece, for which not one copy was sold in 20 years, leaped into prominence and sold 250,000 copies in two weeks. Perhaps there are other good songs buried in musical libraries which might also be dug out and used to fill in some unoccupied radio hour.

Severing Athletic Relations

BEGINNING next fall two more schools will sever athletic relations because of too intense rivalry between them. The University of Pennsylvania and Pennsylvania State college will inaugurate an athletics "holiday" for at least one year because of this rivalry and not because of the recent death received in a bout with a Penn State man. That this breach was approaching before the accident is seen in the fact that the university dropped State from its football schedule for 1930 and from the basketball schedule for 1930-31.

That athletic relations must be severed is an indictment of American intercollegiate activities. It occurs when the rivalry becomes too intense as in the case of Harvard and Princeton, Army and Navy, Haverford and Swarthmore, or, less recently, Oregon and Oregon State. If the athletes of two schools cannot meet each other with some semblance of sportsmanship shown in their contests it is probably best that they should be kept apart. Perhaps too much attention is paid to the mere matter of winning, to the neglect of other qualities. Supplanting some of the spirit of English athletics in America might help to remedy this evil. The United States ought not to claim that athletics contains disciplinary value when such cases show more evidence of enmity and personal rancor than friendliness.

If an act limits the growth and freedom of others in the class, it is immoral, declared a University of Denver lecturer the other day. On the contrary, it looks to us that if it limits the growth and freedom of the doer it is more likely to be running crosswise to the accepted order.

Exceptionally brilliant children, who are known as prodigies and geniuses in their youth, usually turn out to be failures in their later lives, we are told. No wonder so many college men make successes after they get out of school.

Washington held a big clean-up day on the campus recently and 800 men turned out and worked while co-eds provided eats. Sports and a ball game livened up the program. There is a tradition worth half a dozen traditions like dances, senior mustaches, or canes.

"Eighty Students Make Phi Beta"—headline. And 79 persons' self-confidence probably went up.

A savant once said "asking a question implies ignorance." It also implies an ambition to learn.

The Collegiate Pulse

CAMPAIGN SPEECHES (Denver Clarion)

If the boys who are running for student president expect to get any votes on the speeches they made before the students yesterday, the candidates had best run for dog-catchers.

With a couple of exceptions, there were no attempts made on the part of the speakers to outline a platform or to enumerate any principles upon which their candidacy is founded.

Any "Saphead" can get up and tell how thankful he is for his nomination and how he will do all in his power to further the interests of the students. Such inane meaningless statements are made best in the high school assemblies. By the time politicians reach their senior year in college they ought to have a few cut and dried opinions of their own about things, or at least of the groups they represent.

We students all know that your presidential candidates are "thankful" for your nominations. What we would like to hear from you is a public discussion of your stand on various campus issues, i. e.:

- 1. The smoking question. 2. The enforcement or abolishment of traditions. 3. Student football excursions. 4. More power for student officers. 5. Distribution and use of student funds. 6. Wages for student officers. 7. Regard for the non-fraternity group. Come on now, boys. Speak up and acquit yourselves!
