

High Scholarship Indicates Future Success Says Visitor

William Ferguson, Stanford Psychology Student, Expresses Views Concerning Study Of Vocations and Hobbies

By RUFUS KIMBALL

A good banker, if he takes up golf, is apt to be a good golfer. Similarly, university students who do well in their scholastic work and get good grades, as a general rule, are those who make themselves known in campus activities. Accomplishment in one line almost always carries with it a proportionate degree of accomplishment in the other.

These theories form the basis of an extensive research into the relationship between vocations and hobbies, a study which has been begun at Stanford university this spring by William Ferguson, an advanced student in psychology there. Ferguson is visiting on the Oregon campus over Junior Week-end.

Yesterday he conferred with Dr. Howard R. Taylor, head of the personnel bureau, on methods of compiling data for the survey.

"The energy and ability which carry a man to the top in business or in scholarship," Ferguson said, "generally bring him success in whatever outside activities he may go in for in his leisure time. Moreover, the type of activities or hobbies indulged in usually parallels pretty closely the individual's vocational capacities."

Ferguson expressed a belief that among university graduates most outside interests can be traced to their college careers. Education and early training are among the chief factors taken into consideration in the questionnaire which he is preparing, he explained. "Interests which a student fails to acquire in college," he said, "are seldom picked up after graduation."

Good grades in college according to Ferguson, are a pretty reliable indication of success in later life.

Golf Semi-Finals Will Begin Today, Announces Short

Matches Must Be Run Off By Semi-finalists by End of This Week

Semi-final match play in the Emerald's spring divot derby begins today, Faulkner Short, manager, announced yesterday. Players must finish their semi-final matches by the end of this week so that the finals can be run off before the state tournament begins, May 26. All Emerald tournament golfers must be off the greens by that date.

Gruenig Wins

Results of last week's play show that Charles Gruenig goes into the semi-finals by eliminating George Beecher, low qualifier, seven up and six to play. Gruenig is playing close-to-par golf. Keith Hall played a consistent game to eliminate Chuck Williams, three up and one to play. Olinger won from Wilston Johnston, six up and five to play, and Tom Chave, by virtue of his three up and one to play victory over Jerome Lillie, is the other semi-finalist in the championship flight.

Keeney Is Victor

In second flight matches, Bob Keeney won from Phil Cogswell, Art Schoeni defeated Howard Hughes, Wally Giles beat Vernon Arnett, and Frank Young won from Wally Boyle to remain in the tournament.

Pairings for this week's semi-final round are: Championship flight, Charles Gruenig vs. Keith Hall, Harold Olinger vs. Tom Chave; first flight, Ellis Short vs. Bob Bishop, Clarence Veal vs. winner of lower bracket match; second flight, Bob Keeney vs. Art Schoeni, Wally Giles vs. Frank Young.

'One Year in a Dorm is Beneficial To Freshmen', is Opinion of Stanford Stude Concerning Deferred Pledging

EMERALD POLL ON DEFERRED PLEDGING FOR MEN

This is the fourth of a series of interviews on deferred pledging run in connection with the Emerald pledging poll.

By RALPH DAVID

The greatest advantage of the deferred pledging system is that it places freshmen in such a position that it is strictly up to them as to whether they make good and survive the first year or not, according to Pete Heiser, student at Stanford university, who is visiting on the campus this week.

"The freshman year in the dorm is the best one in a man's university career, and the men that survive this year are the ones that are worth while. In the dormitory a man is wholly on his own. There is no one to care if he cuts a class or flunks an exam. The man soon realizes his responsibility and if he has the stuff in him he immediately gets to work," said Mr. Heiser.

"When the rushing period arrives fraternities know what men they want and do not have to gamble on their ability to make good," said the Stanford men, who is rushing chairman of his fraternity. The freshman, at the same time, is more valuable to the fraternity because of his large acquaintance among other freshmen, many of whom pledged other houses than his own or preferred to remain in the dormitory, and because he has gained initiative and a sense of his responsibility to make good for his own sake as well as for the fraternity.

"Instead of looking at deferred pledging from an entirely selfish standpoint, fraternity men should also look at it as benefitting the freshman. From my own experience as a freshman in a dormitory I realize how much it meant to be placed so completely on my own. I believe that first year was worth more to me than any other."

Pledging at Stanford is deferred until the first part of the spring quarter, explained Mr. Heiser. The rush session is divided into two periods. The first period lasts for 10 days and fraternities are allowed one date with the rushes during that time. During the second period of five days the rushes may date as many times as they are asked by the fraternities. The last day of the second period is preference night and the freshman makes his choice then. No fraternity may ask a man to pledge until that time.

Although there are infractions of the rushing rules, and these sometimes cause ill-feeling between fraternities, the general advantage of deferred pledging both to the freshman and the fraternity is recognized at Stanford, concluded Mr. Heiser.

HALL FITS IN WITH HIS BUSINESS SLOGAN

As he sat there, looking for all the world as if he was about to sign a contract, or dictate a letter, I remembered I had read in some of his circular material his campaign slogan, "A business executive for our state executive." He was speaking deliberately, with precision and conviction. He said that he greatly favored the re-organization of the state government into a cabinet system similar to that of the federal government. His argument was that it would be businesslike.

"It wouldn't, though, affect very much the function of the state board of higher education. It would remain practically unchanged." He had apparently considered all of the technicalities and wide-reaching effects of such a change, because he talked for some time on just how the legislature would have to function and what would happen to the many state boards and commissions. He had all the information on tap.

It is not enough to say of Charles Hall that he is a business executive, though. He is thoroughly a gentleman, and it is the natural thing to like him. Talking with him, you could guess, if you did not already know, that he has a long list of activities and accomplishments behind him.
