The Oregon Daily Emerald, official publication of the Associated Students of the University of Oregon, Eugene, issued daily except Sunday and Monday, during the college year

Morals

THE morals of the modern generation will be the death of its elders yet. Particularly those elders whose job it is to keep the life in colleges above reproach

Sometimes the ideals are set by the persons making the rules, sometimes the geographical location governs them. At least this can be found to be true to that mooted topic "How late shall co-eds stay out at night?"

THERE are various answers to that question. Indiana answers it by forbidding students to "sit it out" in cars between dances and by declaring that students cannot transport their "dates" to the dance in a car unless a parent of either of the students is the driver

Colleges also show their trust or distrust in students by the time which they set for their women students to "sign in"

NEBRASKA waged war for a fifteen-minute extension on its present time limit of 12:15, which is the same hour Oregon observes, except for senior women, spring term, who have until 1 o'clock

A loud noise paralyzes the stomach, a research at Colgate university showed. No wonder we get indigestion every time they serve soup down at our house were heads of a big organization. Such a token would be treasured far above the sundry honorary pins and medallions a student collects in his four years

Women don't wear so many clothes as they used to, but they are noisier, the papers tell us. Which are?

Revolts

MODERNISM, or the "divine unrest," is rampant with each succeeding generation. Each is modernistic because it is different from the way people do things that particular day

Men, with less to kick against because they are less shackled in their social behavior by late-hour rules and smoking ordinances, have taken up the sword against masculine clothes

Five hundred strong Dartmouth men turned Boy Scouts. Bare knees were flaunted in the face of convention and the innovators felt wicked and Bohemian by their actions

Bayonets

WITH the passing of the bayonets goes from the campus another trace of the World War. Back in the time when America entered the conflict the R. O. T. C. came to the University of Oregon

Now few men are enrolled in military courses; and far fewer would enroll if it were not the price of higher education. The blades that take their name from Bayonne no longer are for a hated enemy

Five hundred Dartmouth students paraded in gaudy shorts as a protest against conventional male attire. The item was buried inside of the newspapers

But then it has its recompense. For those with natural ailments; And 'twill be fun to be in doubt, As just to what that screen's about

Big day for the contribution box, what? Oh, yes, here's another crack: "Eminent political economist: John Stewart Warner."—from a quiz paper in econ

Some grader must have turned that one in. It would take a guy of about that caliber to think a mistake in a quiz paper was funny!

Malcolm Campbell, graduate student in the department of psychology, has received an appointment to the Stanford department of psychology where he will work next year under the direction of Dr. E. K. Strong

Women don't wear so many clothes as they used to, but they are noisier, the papers tell us. Which are?

Modern youth bathes in pink and purple bath salts because it thinks that it is bathing in the right season.—Washington State Evergreen

Our passion for a well-rounded education is such that we are in danger of manufacturing a nation of billiard balls.—The Pennsylvanian

"Speaking of bathing in famous springs," a fellow tramp once told us, "I bathed in the spring of '86."—W. S. C. Evergreen

With the presentation of the East-West Review, we are reminded again of the high purpose and lofty ideals of the Cosmopolitan club

A new organization, having existed only since 1907, and only on our campus since 1920, it has done much toward forwarding an international fellowship among university and college students

True, editors and managers receive salaries for their work while the student officers do not. The idea of a reward for publications heads was more as a remembrance of the college days when they

No, absolutely, positively not! We absolutely refuse to print another "Bank got shot" poem. One is enough, too much

But here's some contributions we will print:

Then there is poor John Crock-et! He had to have the mimeograph department write letters to his women. Too bad he can't hire Little Blue Eyes to be his secretary—she would relieve him of the trouble—and how!

Dr. Lesch has promised his 8 o'clock Shakespeare class an endowment of cough syrup to be dispensed at the door

"I went out with a coed last night," writes J. B. A. "She's dumb. She thinks 'Yellow Jacket' is a bee circus."

HYMN TO THE SOON-TO-BE-FORGOTTEN KNEE

Things that we have seen for years, We'll soon relinquish, it appears, Since style has laid her edict down, And on short shirts is bound to frown

Those shapely limbs we've known so well, Are sounding out their parting knell; Oh, we to me, that they should go, That made the libe a follies' show

But then it has its recompense, For those with natural ailments; And 'twill be fun to be in doubt, As just to what that screen's about

Big day for the contribution box, what? Oh, yes, here's another crack: "Eminent political economist: John Stewart Warner."—from a quiz paper in econ

Some grader must have turned that one in. It would take a guy of about that caliber to think a mistake in a quiz paper was funny!

Malcolm Campbell, graduate student in the department of psychology, has received an appointment to the Stanford department of psychology where he will work next year under the direction of Dr. E. K. Strong

The study has been provided for by a special grant made by a number of Japanese, and the two men will study the mental and physical characteristics of the two races as measured by various psychological tests

Campbell will receive his master's degree here this spring. His thesis was a study of "Individual Differences in the Speed of Reactions in the Large Muscle Groups"

EMERALD OF THE AIR

By THORNTON GALE

Quality rather than quantity was stressed by Tau Delta Delta, underclass women's musical honorary, in their "Emerald of the Air" program broadcasting over KORE at 8 o'clock last night

The girls' trio, composed of Marvin Jane Hawkins, Sally Holloway, and Maxine Glover, was featured in seven popular vocal numbers. In yesterday's program the girls were billed as the "Torr-id Trio"

Sing Harper, accompanying himself on his guitar, sang "It Happened in Monterey" and "If You Believe in Me"

Pat Boyd, versatile pianist, played several piano solos. "Miss Boyd deserves a great deal of credit for her work over KORE," said Art Potwin, director of Emerald of the Air, last night

Tonight's broadcast, the second program of the closing week, will feature Henry Kaaha, Hawaiian soloist, singing native and popular songs, accompanying himself on his guitar

The Alpha Chi Omega trio, who have been presented over KORE before, with favorable comment, will make their appearance again tonight in a medley of popular songs

"Palmer and Potwin," announcers extraordinary, are both sticking close to the microphone of KORE during the closing week, and will illuminate the program with wisecracking comment

FORUM

Those who follow the announcements of the drama department are concerned over the spring play—we find no mention of the leading lady! We suspect that there is one, however, since we have seen pictures of her subordinates, in recent Emeralds

Closing Date Extended For Architect's Plans

The closing date of the architectural contest which five of the students in the school of architecture and allied arts have entered has been extended to the end of the term, according to a telegram from W. R. B. Wilcox, instructor in architecture here, who is now in Washington, D. C.

The plans, which are for a hotel to be erected on the summit of Sugar Loaf mountain, Maryland, are to be sent at the end of the term to Mr. Wilcox, who will exhibit them to Gordon Strong, a philanthropic millionaire who is sponsoring the contest

In the telegram, Mr. Wilcox advises the Stronghold Bunch, composed of Harlow Hudson, Kenton Hamaker, Lucille Wirth, Chloethel Woodard, and Edward Isaacson, the students who are working on plans for the hotel, not to overwork themselves on their plans

"Thou shalt not love" has become the first commandment at the University of Indiana. Students may not sit out dances in snug corners in the back seat of their automobiles, because the officials have forbidden such means of transportation to social functions unless the driver is a "responsible party"

Editors Appoint Reporting Staff On Frosh Paper

Reporters for the freshman edition of the Emerald, which is to make its appearance Friday morning, May 23, were named yesterday by Sterling Green, editor of the sheet, and Rufus Kimball, managing editor
