Rioting of Students Causes Comment by School Editors

With unemployment and the economic depression as a worldwide source of revolution and instability, the reports of the part taken by students in various countries in stimulating and leading the spirit of unrest by rioting and protest have received wide discussion in the college press.

Within the last few days, Egyptian students set fire to one of the Cairo school buildings and later a large number of student strikers attacked those who refused to join them, with the result that several were injured when the police joined the fray. The cause of the trouble seems to be agitation against the existing government, the new constitution and electoral laws.

Student rioting in Spain has continued for some time. Law students in Barcelona showed an anti-monarchistic spirit and those in Seville combined rebellion against the government with discontent against the university administration.

A third example is found in South America where Peruvian students overthrew Leguia and the Argentinians aided in the displacement of Irigoyen.

In contrast to this, there is the recent riot at Princeton resulting in the destruction of private property, rocking of interstate busses and the suspension of 42 men. Along the same lines is the traditional Yale freshman riot, the Gowns against Towns. Sedate Harvard has representatives who have known the inside of a jail due to "boyish pranks." With a few exceptions, such as the New York students who were jailed last winter because of too active sympathy with the garment workers' strike, most of the student riots in this country have been caused by mass meetings smacking strongly of football, tradition or "good spirits."

An editorial in the Pennsylvania does not advocate mob action as a principle, but points out the desirability of rioting over political, religious, social and economic issues rather than peurile rebellions against the local police. The last European riots at least indicate an awareness of existing problems not found to any great extent among young American students. Another opinion expressed in this week's college press on rioting in the American universities is that such purposeless destruction is stupid and ought to be discouraged much more emphatically than has been done heretofore.

VIOLINIST, ORGANIST GIVE STUDENT RECITAL

The typical Bach complexities, and Gould was not found wanting. The Andantino from Widor's Fifth Organ symphony showed the organist's skill in introducing and interweaving the various voices of the instrument without the slightest confusion. The varying themes of his last number, Cesar Franck's Chorale in A-minor, were interpreted by Gould with impartial excellence. His renditions of its turbulent passages and of the contrasting pianissimos were equally effective.

Just What Action?

TODAY the student advisory committee will meet for the purpose of determining what action should be taken against four students who were declared instrumental in the organization of a rally which disrupted classes and the general routine of University work last Friday morning.

Whether this group will act wisely and come to a just conclusion or not we cannot say. There are many things which must be taken into consideration as the precariousness of the entire situation dwells upon the mind of every committee member.

Friendship and cooperation between the two, now quite clearly defined lines dividing the University administration and the student administration, is constantly the aim in all official action. Will this be brought about should the advisory group stand above the students ready to switch them like children of six?

For the progress of the University both students and faculty MUST work in complete harmony, understand respective weaknesses, and deal among themselves as men and women of the world. Can this be done unless a faculty "advisory" committee realizes that students are equipped with normal intelligence and will reason so as to avoid repetition of mistakes?

By this we mean that the men who disrupted the regular school day for a display of spirit among fellow students should be heard and consulted in an advisory conference. The overbalance of harm against the benefit of the rally ought to be clearly defined. These men, and men of future generations, will perhaps think more clearly before staging such a demonstration after this conscientious and equitable understanding than should they if they are penalized by some physical or tangible punishment.

Realizing the balance the student advisory committee must hit between the faculty, under which they work, and the associated students, we understand their difficult position. But we are also appealing to the sense of justification among the faculty members. It is for their benefit that we gain complete cooperation.

Students will reason, and in the case at hand undoubtedly admit their mistakes. For the construction of a greater institution the line dividing the groups, students and faculty should be eradicated. Let them unite in one common aim by beginning here with a satisfactory case. Let the committee work in its true capacity, "advisory."

Obviously there are cases where steps in diverse directions must be taken, but when an opportunity such as the present drops into the hands of the advisory group let its advantages be accepted—for a clearer and more personal understanding.

In the Face of a Gael

"ON to St. Mary's" is a rallying cry on the campus now, that if given support, will send an unbeatable Webfoot eleven to San Francisco to tackle the strong Gael team that has chalked up many victories during its present season and is still on the warpath.

The Webfoots, by the time of the Thanksgiving Day classic in the Bay City, will be a different team from the one which faced Oregon State last Saturday. Oregon was a rudderless football ship that foundered on the flooded field that day, but this week will see the return of Captain Kitzmiller and the rebuilding of a strong eleven under the able tutelage of Dr. C. W. Spears, who this year has given Oregon one of its most successful seasons.

The Oregon gridsters are not "off" following last Saturday's misfortune. Far from it. In truth, the men are pointing to the Gael game as the time for a display of power unavailable against the Beavers.

No Oregon student has lost faith in the Webfoots because of one defeat in a season. That's why we say with so much enthusiasm—"On to St. Mary's."

For Your Benefit

THE evil of campus "handshaking" psychology has been discussed several times in this column of late, but the passage of the time of mid-term grades prompts a renewal of the discussion.

The fear students have of being accused of "handshaking" is in its most vicious stage when it prevents a student who is in danger of failure or probation from going to see his adviser about it. All students who are weak in one or more courses at mid-term have been notified of the fact by a little card which bears their adviser's name and a recommendation that the student consult him at the earliest opportunity.

The advisory system has been set up to prevent faculty attention to the problems of the individual student from being wholly lost in the grind of mass education which turns out degrees by the hundreds every year. It has many features of potential strength, but the good that it may depend entirely on the cooperation of the students; the faculty advisers have no way of forcing the slipping students to come to see them before it is too late.

Some students may think that a conference with an adviser will do nothing toward helping them to raise their grades. The chances are entirely the other way, for the advisers are chosen for their experience on the faculty and the depth of their educational insight. Many times their skilled observation can, after a talk with a student, discover the weak points in his curriculum, his methods of study, his daily living program, or his living environment; and they can indicate to the student the best methods of extricating themselves from their scholarship tangles.

If you are worried about your grades—see your adviser!

All these things are the result of advertising, which attracts to your attention, the local dealers in nationally advertised and guaranteed products, and to the specialties which are the result of studious and clever work on the part of individuals.
