The Oregon Daily Emerald, official publication of the Associated Students of the University of Oregon, Eugene, issued daily except Sunday and Monday, during the college year.

No Discrimination? THE executive council last night assumed responsibility, exercised its right as supreme body of the associated students and dealt out punishment to three members of the student body for what they believed to be a violation of a gentleman's agreement.

Wisely enough the executive council is fulfilling its duties in handling affairs which fall directly under its jurisdiction. An extremely difficult problem to deal with, a problem which has grown tremendously in importance in the eyes of the council with furthered deliberation, but which is appraised less seriously by the University students, has been solved and marked down in the records of the associated students as history.

A violation of confidence has given the executive council sufficient grounds to inflict the punishment upon two of the rally leaders, although this decision is antagonistic to the more lenient policy suggested recently by the Emerald. If, as reported, the yell king and the rally chairman agreed with the student relations committee in a meeting only the night before that classes would not be disturbed on that Friday morning, we waive our suggestion.

The case of the managing editor of the Emerald strikes us as different. Here action, it seems, should have been confined to discipline within the organization of the publication itself. Instead he has been lifted by kite strings and deposited in a limbo of probation beyond reach of Emerald officials.

After The Battle, Mother-- NOW that the home football season is over and student body tickets are no longer to be regarded as the basic currency of campus exchange, we can look at them in a new light.

After the battle come the bouquets, and we wish to commend and congratulate the graduate manager's staff upon the excellence of the associated students' concert series it has just announced for this year.

Maier and Pattison are undisputed masters of the two-piano field; Florence Austral, soprano, and Nathan Milstein, violinist, are at the very top of their respective fields.

Several years ago the student body voted to add the sum of seventy-five cents to the term fees to finance an annual concert series. This is a bright page in the history of the associated students, and it is to be regretted that more students do not take advantage of their earned opportunity to attend the concerts.

But the series for this year can hardly fail to attract capacity crowds to McArthur court. It is far and away the best that has ever been scheduled. Congratulations and thanks, graduate manager and assistants.

Demo Chief Says Party Is Not Wet—headline. But just ask a Republican leader.

The Veneta socialist candidate who used only 13 cents in his campaign for labor commissioner, and that by giving away gum. . . . Shucks, there ought to be some wise crack in that, but we can't think of any.

Campus prowlers have nothing on the Eugene police force. The city council has authorized a prowler car for use throughout the city. So much better than bicycles during this cold weather!

After Arthur Arlett, once deposed editor of the Daily Californian, agreed to run a statement daily that his opinions were not representative of the U. C. executive committee, he was reinstated. That wasn't a concession; it was a privilege.

With Other Editors PUDGY FINGERS So-called student body "leaders" at the University of California, quaking for fear that the recent editorial campaign of The Daily Californian concerning the athletic situation there might be construed as authorized by them have seen fit to place a censorship on the Californian.

content to watch the recent charges and counter-charges beat at the University of California, Southern California only as an incidental spectator, this pitiful attempt to muzzle the student press comes as an admittance that President Stern Altshuler and his Californian executive committee members are purely politicians endeavoring to further their own ends and not those of the students of University of California. The Daily, it must be remembered, does not take a stand one way or the other on the recent controversy aroused by editorials printed in The Californian.

The issue at stake is the censorship of the press. Editor Arthur Arlett, who is to be commended for saying what he had to say in spite of opposition, had a perfect right to print what he believed to be legitimate editorial opinion.

The Daily condemns the action of the California executive committee and hopes the censorship will be removed as hastily as it was applied.—The Stanford Daily.

EPITAPH He was killed by a pledge. Was prep sheik McBain; He asked where he won The typing pin.

BE DEMOCRATIC—Take out all the high school sheik's girls, just to show that you're still the same old guy. Tell them all about school and then kid them on being young, just to show that you have not lost your sense of humor.

BE HELPFUL—Tell them what is wrong with their dress. Quietly correct them by telling them what we do up here at the U. Criticize their little mannerisms, just to show them that they are rather nonsensical. They will appreciate it. Walk into the local business men and proffer them suggestions on how to run their business, according to new ideas that you have gained here at school.

DYNAMITE By T. N. TAYLOR

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Nov. 23.—(Special)—Who ever started the idea; "out in the West where men are men," was all wet, according to T. D. Kelley, senior editor of the Cornell Daily Sun, who was surprised to hear that in western schools women are given equal chance with the men in campus politics, publications, and other activities.

"Women don't have any standing on our campus," Kelley smiled. "We figure that Cornell was originally a man's school and should be a man's school, therefore, we don't want women and refuse to let them have any part in campus activities. They don't rate at all with any of the fraternities on the campus."

As Cornell the student body never gathers as a group for social functions, Kelley said. Each fraternity has a house party every term to which women are invited from other colleges and nearby towns, but rarely any of the local co-eds. These house parties last an entire week-end, the men giving up their house to the women guests.

The entertainment runs night and day, Kelley said, "and by the time a house party breaks up you're about as badly bent in more than one way." Dances at a house party are usually scheduled for 11 p. m. to 4 a. m., but on most occasions they last all night, according to the Cornell daily editor.

"The Oregon Daily Emerald is a nice little sheet," Kelley said. I read almost every issue and certainly get bang out of the features. Wish our paper could use more of that light stuff.

The Cornell Daily Sun, although run by the Cornell chapter of Sigma Delta Chi and members of the student body, is the local town daily. Profits from the paper are divided by the editorial staff. The editor's salary for the year runs between $1,500 and $2,500, the Cornellian student states.

The size of the Cornell daily varies from 6 to 18 pages. A news service is used extensively to fill the paper. "In fact we use it too much," Kelley admitted. Reporters have no definite beats, each reporter is simply limited by the extent of his imagination. "It does mean considerable duplication," the editor agreed, but it's good training in that it makes a reporter hustle if he intends to keep on the staff. The year is divided into periods of six weeks and a contest runs for each period. The winner is promoted to the upper news staff, or "pay" end of the paper, and the contest goes ruthlessly on. To win a place on the upper news staff means plenty of hard work, Kelley said.

Kelley was interested in the fact that Oregon students can attend the University for a whole year on $900 or less. "It costs me about $3,000 a year. I managed to get by on $2,200 one year, but it was a terrible strain," the Cornell student said. Fees at Cornell run between $400 and $500. "But then, Cornell is well known throughout the country, whereas few people have ever heard of the University of Oregon; no insult intended, but just an excuse for our high fees."

Dr. Clark Writes Book on Life of William P. Lord

The biography of William Paine Lord, Oregon judge and ex-governor, has just been completed by Dr. R. C. Clark and sent to be added in the Dictionary of American Biography.

In 1868 Mr. Lord took up law practice at Salem. Later he served as a city attorney in this city and in 1878 as a state senator, and as justice of the state supreme court from 1880 to 1894. William Lord served also, as governor of the state from 1895 to 1899.

STOP BAWLING

To the Editor: To the student basketball players who continue to address communications to the Emerald which they end with the defiant tone: "How about it, Washke?" let us say that in spite of the good they may be attempting to do, the fact still remains that the task they impose on the director of the men's gym is well nigh impossible.

The great difficulty that the gym faces is lack of space. Let us remind the correspondents of that. And what can be done to relieve the cramped conditions of the men's gym unless a new building be erected on the campus. With that possibility far off in the future it appears to us as if the communications were merely wasting their efforts on a cause which is granted to be a worthy one but futile.

Since a new gym can not be built at this time to aid Mr. Washke's program of gym classes and instruction there is only one sensible thing to do—stop bawling about balls and take up some other gym activity. The physical education school still offers swimming, handball, track, golf, soccer, and other specialties. If basketball is not available in the desired quantity and cannot be increased, let's stop discussing the matter.—W. D.

Fifteen Skeletons Unearthed Near Town of Gold Hill

An ancient Indian burial ground lying across the Rogue from the straggling little town of Gold Hill, Oregon, has been the scene of several recent excavations by Dr. L. S. Cressman, professor of sociology. The work is being done as a part of general research in Oregon archaeology.

About 15 skeletons have been found in varying stages of preservation. The moist sand in which the burials have been made has caused almost complete decomposition in the majority of the burials. These excavations have unearthed eight obsidian knives varying from six to thirteen inches in length. Two were buried with each corpse. This means that some corpses were buried with no accompanying knives, Dr. Cressman states. Knives and pipes had been previously unearthed by the former owner of the field in which the mound lies.

"There is no way at present to fix even the approximate date of the burials, but the complete absence of any signs of the white man's culture indicates that the people from whom these dead have come occupied the land long before the coming of the white man," Dr. Cressman said.

Drives South W. E. Hempstead Jr., instructor in public speaking, will drive down to San Francisco with Dr. Earl W. Wells, professor at Oregon State, and Roger Pfaff to attend the convention of the Western Association of Teachers of Speech, which is to be held November 27, 28, and 29.
