Greater Oregon Members Start Annual Christmas Enrollment Drive

Freck Urges That Students Talk Up University During Holidays

"The 1930 Greater Oregon committee sent in two and a half times as many recommendation cards of prospective freshmen than the year before, bringing the largest freshman class ever known to the University," stated Joe Freck, chairman, at the last meeting of the year.

"The size of the student body is a determining factor in the amount of appropriation that the school will get," he continued. "Christmas vacation gives three weeks in which to talk up the University to prospective students to get them to come to Oregon."

"Material will be sent out after Christmas and particular attention given to those interviewed by members of the committee."

Freck comments work done during the summer, Freck commended the students who kept up their correspondence with the main office at the University.

The 12 sending in the most letters and post cards were: Jack Stipe, of Portland, who sent in the greatest number; Maryellen Bradford, Klamath Falls; Mary Garrison, Eugene; Alice Holmback, Medford; John Long, Roseburg; Jack Edlefsen, Portland; Nancy Taylor, Portland; Paul Biggs, Ontario; Jack Nelson, Pendleton; Betty Bond, Pendleton; Dorothy Eads, Medford; Warner Guiss, Woodburn.

Bob Miller, head of the eastern Oregon division, gave a short resume of the state trip made during the summer.

Trip Is Successful
"Our trip was especially successful this summer," he said, "as it was carried on in a business-like manner. Before, students representing the University have tried to interest prospective students by telling them of the good times to be had here. They had jazz bands and lots of rah rah, which was entirely misleading, and caused trouble with high school officials. Our trip this summer knocked down the objections of principals on that account."

"We traveled 2400 miles all together. There were 13 days of actual traveling and we spoke in a great many schools and organizations. Fine receptions were given us nearly every place visited, especially at Medford, Burns and Baker."

Freck concluded the meeting by asking the heads of each section to turn in the names of the underclassmen who did outstanding work on their committee. These names will be the basis of choosing next year's Greater Oregon committee.

Condon Popular As Examinations Worry Students

"Do your exam cramming early," might be the motto of Oregon students this week, the last chance before the heavy fog of finals settles down. Attendance figures from the reserve libraries show quite an increase over last year's figures for the same days.

Students reading in the English-history library are much more ambitious than they were in 1929. This "do something early" trend is affecting the business administration department, which circulated quite a few more books this year, especially in the last few days.

Even the law students seem to be using a few more books as exam time approaches.

At Condon this week there was an increase of about 600 on Monday over Sunday in day's circulation. This might be due to the students suddenly realigning on Monday that exams were very near—or that little studying was done on Sunday for the next day's classes.

Senior Football Manager For 1931 To Be Selected

The senior football manager for the 1931 grid season will be chosen today at the final meeting of the executive council, George Cherry, president of the associated students, said last night. Recommendations of the athletics committee for the office will be considered by the executive council in making the final decisions.

Junior football managers will be selected after the appointment of next year's senior manager. Robert E. (Hack) Miller, senior manager of managers, will collaborate with the new football head in choosing the junior men.

Roll Calls of Red Cross Increased Over Last Year's

Living Organizations Take Out Memberships, Faculty Gives

Complete reports of the American Red Cross roll call on the campus show an increase of $56 over last year's contribution from faculty and living organizations, according to Miss Mary Annin, executive secretary of the Lane county chapter of the American Red Cross, and assistant professor of applied sociology.

"The response this year has been the best we have ever had," Miss Annin said. "University students and faculty members helped not only in giving money, but also in soliciting on the campus and in Eugene residential and business districts. We are very pleased with the showing that has been made," she said.

Thirty living centers on the campus gave a total of $185, as compared to $145 last year. The faculty members contributed $188 while last year only $172 was given. Each living organization was asked to take out house memberships of $5, but several went over the mark, seven giving $10.

The work on the campus was under the general supervision of Dr. Philip A. Parsons, dean of the school of applied social science. A committee of faculty members had charge of the solicitation among the faculty and members of the administration staff. Bess Templeton, senior in sociology, was chairman of the committee which had charge of the solicitation among the houses.

The roll call on the campus this year was made especially significant because of the fact that the National Red Cross has subsidized the local training center for the training of rural social workers to the extent of $6500.

Onthank Discloses Dog Fight As Journalistic Inspiration

Ex-Editor of Emerald Tells Of Experiences as Journalist

"A dog fight proved to be my journalistic inspiration," Karl Onthank, dean of personnel, and editor of the 1912-13 Emerald, smilingly said.

"This particular fight occurred in Springfield, between the University football coach's canine and a little street mongrel of that city. It was a pitched battle, and the owners of the dogs almost came to blows themselves. I wrote up the story and handed it into the staff, and much to my surprise it was accepted and I was given a place as reporter. This was in my freshman year."

Mr. Onthank was editor of the Oregonian in his junior year, and in 1912 was elected editor of the Emerald. The position was filled by means of the regular student body election, the names of the candidates for editor being placed on the ballot along with the student activities candidates.

"The staff room was in the basement of McClure, and it shared its conveniences with Dean Eric Allen, who was then head of the department of journalism for his first year. There was no school of journalism at that time. The tri-weekly editions were printed at a job printer's downtown, and the staff members used to fly down there on their bicycles with copy," said Mr. Onthank.

It was through the efforts of Andrew Collier, business manager, that the Emerald was able to publish three issues a week, instead of two as had been done in previous years, Mr. Onthank stated. There were six pages to the issue, and the student body numbered only about 800, so that the paper had almost as much news as it has today.

"The staff was very small, and the editors did most of the work. We had our difficulties, too, what with a small press which broke down frequently.

"Our biggest problem was to keep up student morale. The University's funds were at a very critical state, due to the rapid growth of the institution, and the students didn't know whether there would be a college next year or not. For this reason, the Emerald had to be very careful never to print anything which might prejudice the public against the University.

"The legislature had made several appropriations, which were referred to the people to be voted upon. Some of them passed and some of them didn't. There was one individual who was very well known at that time in this vicinity. He was a resident of Cottage Grove, which was Eugene's rival city in those days. It was known by the students that he had had considerable influence in getting the legislative measures referred to the people, and was against the appropriations," Mr. Onthank said.

"Consequently, the April first edition came out with a banner head proclaiming that this certain person had been circulating propaganda about the campus for the referendum, and against the best interests of the University. The story was continued on the back page, and in the very last line the excited reader found these words, 'This is a hoax!'"
