Among Portland Friends

EUGENE and University people who harbor some little ill-will toward Portland business men who, they believe, are trying to take the annual O. S. C.-U. of O. football battle to Portland, can now rest a little easier.

Aaron M. Frank, life member of the Oregon Alumni association, who did more than any other man (save Kitzmiller, perhaps) to make University football in Portland a success this year, is determined on keeping the contest on college gridirons.

"Concerning the bringing of this game to Portland, I have in no uncertain way gone on record and have been active in keeping the game in Corvallis and Eugene," Mr. Frank has written to an Emerald communicant, W-103, who intimated that Portland men wanted the game there. "There are many other games that can be played in Portland. My stand in this matter has been, I thought, well known to all who were interested-and especially to the residents of Eugene and Corvallis and the student bodies of both institutions."

It becomes rather a question as to the identity of the "prominent business men" who look forward to the game's migrating to Portland. Undoubtedly there are those men in that city who would favor it-and it is just as possible that the University is at fault

In the cry for bigger and better gates and gate receipts the University has often cast longing eyes Portland-ward. Eugene attendance is so limited that opponents are hard to find. With pressure on officials both for profits and "big" games, they could naturally welcome a Portland invitation. Students themselves are making necessary any "home" contests away from home, so they may be doubly thankful for Aaron Frank's stand on the matter, and assured of his hole-hearted interest in the affairs of

A Figuring for Vacation

"Do we have any vacations this term?"

Someone asked that question yesterday because he was growing aweary of the long grind of college studies. Unceasing study it seemed to him-and he was not in the least pleased when he could find no extra days off in winter term. We sympathized in this manner: . In the whole school year from Freshman Week to Commencement there are 8 months and 23 days. Classes normally meet (including Saturdays as regular class days), except for Freshman Week-6 days; Armistice Day-1 day; Thanksgiving-3 days; Fall term examinations—6 days; Christmas vacation—12 days; Winter registration-1 day; Winter examinations-6 days; Spring vacation-6 days; Spring registration-1 day; Junior Week-End-2 days; Memorial Day-1 day; Spring examinations -6 days; Commencement-1 day; Sundays (not included anywhere in list above)-38 days.

Who wouldn't sympathize with a college student who gets only 90 days of vacation out of approximately 260? Why, that averages 50 class days a term unless that poor grind enters school on the last possible day each term! Even then he can skip only 34 days to average less than 39 class days a term.

No wonder our student grew aweary with his intensive study. It must be intensive study to complete a term's work in 39 days.

Essay on Rat-Racing

SOMEONE asked the other day if it was a crime to rat-race.

Immediately grasping the true conception of the word "crime," which, according to Webster, means an act that subjects the doer to legal punishment, we answered that simply holding one of the fair sex gently in arms and skipping merrily about a dance floor could not come under that classification.

But, was the retort, that was the wrong meaning of the "ratrace" term. Hence, we discover two definitions:

1. To scurry at an accelerating speed in scarcely a dignified position around a more respectable dance floor.

2. To slink from a fraternity house and attend, unaccompanied by a lady friend, a non-campus dance.

If the latter, we answered, is the most prevalent conception of a rat-race, it is less justifiable for us to commend or approbate the practice. Wish-waggling with a dame that didn't look bad from across the hall should not be up to the ideal pastime for the average college man. The second definition of Webster's "crime" gives us an explanation of why fraternity men leave their pledge pins and membership emblems on the dresser before attending such an affair: "A grave offense against morality or social order."

No, we do not advocate this form of rat-racing, we concluded, but, as for definition No. 2-who cares?

Emerald Extras History Making; First With News

The Emerald made history Saturday with the publication of two today at 5 p. m. extras, telling first of the finding of Mrs. Lila Thatcher, house mother of the Chi Omega sorority, and later of her sudden death at the Pacific Christian hospital.

We have made a research of all the better methods for accomplishing this but the most superior dodge that we've heard of yet is the one that Fletch Udall uses. He goes to school during the week and then moves over to the University infirmary for free lodging during the week-ends. This cuts down approximately two days' expenses out of every seven.

Also, along with all the sororities on the campus, we have been trying to run down the dope on whoever it was that serenaded with the phonograph last Saturday night.
