Dime Crawl Tonight Outstanding Event of Week

The outstanding social event of the week is the Dime Crawl, which is scheduled for from 6 until 7:30 o'clock this evening.

Ed will again dress up and go to call upon Betty or all other coeds who go by that appellation.

The thin dimes roll in like quicksilver (it is to be hoped) and every fair maiden tries to look her fairest, because the contest always waxes slightly warm between the women's houses, for popularity in this case is measured in cash.

Kappa Alpha Theta took first place last term, with Alpha Gamma Delta and Chi Omega coming in for second and third places.

Friends Concerned At Miss Creech's Illness

Friends of Julia Creech, Kappa Kappa Gamma, are greatly concerned to learn of her illness. She was taken to the Pacific Christian hospital early Monday morning. Her condition, as the society column goes to press, is reported as unchanged.

Kappa Alpha Theta To Honor Mrs. Russell

Invitations have been sent out by Kappa Alpha Theta for a bridge luncheon to be given Saturday noon, honoring their housemother, Mrs. George Russell. Sixty guests have been invited.

Dorothy Tongue is in charge of the arrangements. The freshmen will serve.

Madelon Brodie Leaves for Finland

Madelon Brodie, sophomore, left yesterday afternoon to sail for Finland with her parents. She plans to be gone a year. Miss Brodie is a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma.

Pennington-Lindeman Wedding To Be February 8

A marriage of extreme interest to the campus is that of Miss Marion Pennington and Bernard Lindeman, which will take place February 8.

Miss Pennington, who is affiliated with Alpha Chi Omega, was graduated last June. Mr. Lindeman, who was also graduated in June, is a member of Sigma Chi.

Following the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Lindeman will make their home in Rainier.

WHAT SHOW TONIGHT?

Colonial — Jeannette MacDonald in "Monte Carlo."

Heilig — "Darkened Rooms" with Evelyn Brent.

McDonald — Emil Jannings and Marlene Dietrich in "The Blue Angel."

Rex — Grace Moore in "A Lady's Morals" (Jenny Lind.)

State — Charles Farrell in "Liliom," and "A Lady to Love."

Jenny Lind's Story at Rex

Grace Moore literally brings to life the famous Swedish nightingale, Jenny Lind, in "A Lady's Morals," current Rex feature.

Grace Moore, who is late of Metropolitan opera fame, is a singer who sings with her brain as well as her voice. This is a virtue seldom awarded to movie actresses.

Three famous composers, Oscar Strauss, Carrie Jacobs Bond, and Herbert Stothart, wrote the songs that make up the strongest element in the movie.

Telling an engrossing story of the quaint Swedish singer, her whirlwind success in both Europe and America, many of the old figures in the show world of Lind's time are brought to life. Chief among them was P. T. Barnum—portrayed by who else but Wallace Beery.

Mystery at Heilig

Evelyn Brent, lovely and a convincing actress, appears at the Heilig today in a thriller, "Darkened Rooms."

The vehicle deals with a girl drawn into a "seance" racket run by Neil Hamilton. Being honest-hearted, she strives to make him see the light and quit. "You never can win." The scenario was taken from one of Philip Gibb's lighter stories, published serially in a magazine.

Besides the star and Hamilton, Doris Hill, Wallace McDonald, and Gale Henry are in the cast.

Colonial Plays "Monte Carlo"

A gay picture, filled with spice and zest, is "Monte Carlo," closing its Colonial theatre run today. Jeannette McDonald and Jack Buchanan have the leading roles.

The film is the tale of a lovely countess who goes to a European gambling resort to escape a possible marriage with a prince whom she cannot bring herself to love. There she becomes the recipient of a handsome count's affections. The latter becomes her hairdresser in order to be near her.

It is the last chance, by the way, of seeing talented Jack Buchanan. He died of heart trouble in New York last month.

"Blue Angel" Impresses

Overflowing with every combination that is used to make a fine motion picture, "The Blue Angel" opened at the McDonald theatre yesterday, and rocked audiences with its awesome dramatic power.

A description of this masterpiece of screen art would pitifully inadequate. It is one of those rare works which, like the music of masters, cannot be well transcribed

Faculty Says Better Grades Go to Those Who Own Books

That Oregon students spend for textbooks less than one-half the amount spent by students on any other university campus on the Pacific coast is shown by Co-op statistics. Stanford, which leads in textbook sales, likewise leads in scholarship. Is there any correlation between textbook sales and scholarship? If so, should the library reserve system be as extensively used at Oregon as it now is? These were the questions asked of several outstanding men and women in different University departments.

"If we had no reserve system, I wouldn't introduce it," declared Dr. C. V. Boyer, head of the English department. "Its one justification is for students who can't afford to buy their books. There is no substitute for a book which you can buy, read, annotate, carry with you, and keep. Study ought to, and love of literature does, lead to the possession and love of books."

"More effective teaching can be done when textbooks are not adhered to too exclusively. As far as buying books is concerned, I think books for general reading are of greater value for a student's personal library than textbooks," asserted M. H. Douglass, University librarian. "The ideal situation would be to have one or two standard books as texts, and use the reserves for supplementary reading."

"To wish to own a book," stated Frederic S. Dunn, chairman of the department of Latin, "is, judging from my own experience, a sign of greater desire for high-grade scholarship in a student. I admit there seems to be a lack of that disposition among our students. Very few requests have come to me on where to get a certain book. Of course, there are the monetary values to be considered, and it is generally conceded that more affluent students attend Stanford."

Professor Turnbull, of the journalism department, said, "A student is more likely to do better work and enjoy it more if he owns his own book, and can study when and where he pleases, than if he had to depend on library facilities and library hours. I do not in any way criticize our very excellent library service. The good student will prefer to add the use of his favorite texts to that of the library reserves."

"There probably is a correlation between scholarship and textbook sales, but I know so many girls who use the libraries," declared Dorothy Thomas, Y. W. C. A. secretary, "not by choice, but because they simply can't afford to buy their own texts. The student's own finances have a lot to do with it."

O. F. Stafford, chairman of the chemistry department, stated, "Every student should have at his own desk books which represent a substantial outline or framework of his course. It is impossible to put within the compass of any textbook the supporting material the book should have. To fill this need is the function of the reserve library. There should be little difficulty unless the student relies solely on the reserves for his courses."

UCLA Gets Gym Building activities on the campus of the University of California at Los Angeles were given impetus by the announcement of the decision of the regents to begin the construction of two gymnasiums, one for men and one for women. A total sum of $903,293 was allocated by the regents to cover the cost of construction of the two buildings.

Speaker at Education Club Urges Capacity Studying

"We should teach the brighter students to work to capacity instead of deadening their efforts by keeping the mind the same class with the dull students," said Norman C. Thorne, in an address before Omega Delta Pi, undergraduate education club, in Gerlinger hall last night. Speaking from a ed into mere words. It is a tense, dramatic tale of the degradation of a righteous man who falls into a mismatched love affair. "The Blue Angel" is Emil Jannings' first talking picture. That alone should call for a full blast on a trumpet, but with the assistance of hypnotic Marlene Dietrich, the direction of Josef Von Sternberg, the watermark of UFA, the film becomes a milestone in motion picture production.

Films Will Show Cargo Shipments

Movies Will Be Shown at Villard Today

"The Hanging of Northwest Cargo" will be the title for a motion picture and talk to be presented in Villard assembly at 1 o'clock this afternoon. H. C. Hawkins, of the school of business administration, announced yesterday. C. D. Kennedy, who will give the program, is northwest manager for the American and Hawaiian Steamship company.

The films will portray the loading and stowing of goods on the company ships, which are routed to Asiatic and European ports, and will be of special interest to students in foreign trade and transportation. Admission is free, and all interested are invited, Mr. Hawkins said.

Pan Xenia, professional foreign trade honorary, will act as host for the visiting speaker at a luncheon this noon at the College Side Inn. Carroll Watson is in charge of the event.

Finals Prevail at W. S. C.

"Finals," the bugaboo of collegians, are the prime interest of the day at Washington State. Examinations will continue through this week, with registration for the second semester taking place Monday and Tuesday of next week. Classes will hold their initial sessions on Wednesday, February 4.

Condition of Julia Creech Said Fair

Student Undergoes Major Operation at Hospital The condition of Julia Creech, sophomore in English, who underwent a major operation at the Pacific Christian hospital Monday, was reported fair by attending physicians yesterday afternoon. Drs. W. H. Chapman, I. R. Fox, and Orville Waller are attending the case.

Miss Creech's parents came to Eugene when it was found that an operation would be necessary, as did her brother, John, a student in the University last term. Miss Creech is a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma.

Jane Warner in College Magazine's Hall of Fame

Jane Warner, freshman on the campus, and niece of "Pop" Warner of Stanford, has been chosen for College Humor hall of fame. A large photograph of Miss Warner is reprinted in the issue now off the press with the following caption: "Jane Warner, University of Oregon, niece of 'Pop' Warner of Stanford coaching fame. She is an ardent football fan and a keen student of the game, and, we will wager a bright new collar button, an inspiration to the home team. She is a member of the Delta Gamma sorority."
