 McDonald — Greta Garbo and Robert Montgomery in "Inspiration."
 Rex — Dorothy Mackaill in "Once a Sinner."
 State — "Borrowed Wives."

Lincoln Story Success

Today, on the birthday of its inspiration, the Colonial theatre is presenting "Abraham Lincoln," as interpreted by Walter Huston, and Stephen Vincent Benet, who wrote the script.

Produced with an accurate eye to the facts of Lincoln's life and times, the picture is never only a history lesson. The story is vivid, moving, and carries a strong dramatic story. Huston is splendid in this role which marks him as one of America's finest character actors. His marked resemblance to the emancipator is startling.

Garbo and Montgomery Star

The glamorous and fascinating Greta Garbo comes back with more lure than even that of her silent days in "Inspiration," current feature at the McDonald theatre.

If there are any adjectives left unsaid for this dynamic star, the dictionary must yield now, for she merits all the extravagances the English language permits for her superb performance.

Included in the cast of the new film are Robert Montgomery, Lewis Stone, Marjorie Rambeau, John Miljan, and Beryl Mercer.

Woman's Past Film Subject

The story of a girl who craves luxury, finds a man wealthy and willing, makes a mistake, falls in love and finds her past rising up to demand an expiation, is the theme of the Rex theatre's current film, "Once a Sinner."

The cast is headed by Dorothy Mackaill, well remembered for her work in the "Office Wife"; Joel McCrea, Ilka Chase, and Sally Blane.

"Truth About Youth"

Loretta Young and David Manners are co-stars in the current Heilig feature, "Truth About Youth," playing for the last time today.

In this story of the supposed ills of modern youth a wild complicated story pretends to tell the truth, in reality becoming only a mild and rather amusing comedy.

Included in the cast, besides the stars, are Myrna Loy, Conway

Officers Elected By Congressmen

Club Discusses System of Student Graders

Wallace Campbell, junior in sociology, was elected president of the Congress club at the meeting last night in the College Side. Emery Hyde was chosen vice-president; Otto Vonderheit, secretary; Robert Jackson, treasurer; and Claude Condor, sergeant-at-arms.

"Student Graders at Oregon" was the title of the introductory speech of the evening, made by Robert O'Leary. In the subsequent discussion several other phases of the Oregon educational system were considered.

The European system of education, that of a long period of seminar work followed by an oral examination, was advocated by several of the members.

The next meeting of the club will take the form of a mock banquet, a number of members giving "after dinner" speeches of a humorous nature. The general subject and the speakers will be determined by the committee on arrangements, consisting of Ralph Burrough, Robert O'Leary, and George Bennett.

Wm. R. Boone, Portland Organist, to Appear

Mr. and Mrs. John Stark Evans have sent out 500 invitations to faculty members and townspeople for a private recital to be given at the Music building this evening by William Robinson Boone, well-known Portland organist.

Mr. Evans is instructor of organ at the music school, and is also the director of the University glee clubs. Mr. Boone is organist for the Portland Symphony orchestra, and has won an enviable reputation as a concert artist.

The recital will begin at 8 o'clock and will be followed by a reception for Mr. Boone, which will be held in the lounge of the music auditorium beginning at 9:30 o'clock.

Avalanche Hits Sumner, But It's Only Journalists

"Sir," said a bell-hop of the Osburn hotel to Bishop Walter Taylor Sumner, who was basking in the sunlight through the large front hotel window during his first interview a few minutes after arriving in Eugene. "You are wanted on the telephone."

Bishop Sumner retired for a few minutes and announced that the operator had informed him that the reception committee was on its way to meet him and would he receive them.

Shortly afterwards, Vinton Hall, Emerald editor, drove up to the front entrance of the hotel with his famed roadster full and overflowing with eds and co-eds. Upon the back the trusty cameras of George Godfrey, head of the public relations bureau, could be seen.

Six women and four men draped themselves over the car and around Bishop Sumner while the camera clicked many times.

The reception committee had been received and the noisy crowd left the bishop for a couple of hours peace and returned to the campus.

The colorful Argentine, with its pampas and mountains, was the subject of last night's lecture on "A Visit to South America" by Dr. Warren D. Smith, professor of geology. The talk was the sixth of a series of ten by Dr. Smith being sponsored by the University extension division.

"The Argentine is divided geographically into five parts," said Dr. Smith, "the largest of which is the pampas, the great agricultural section. The other divisions are the grand Chaco, a swampy area in the north; the Entre Rios, a frequently flooded country, which nevertheless contains some fine ranches; the Andean mountains, and the slopes of the Andes.

Populated Peculiar Way
 "Argentina is populated in a peculiar manner. One will come to a great thickly populated city, and then pass through a great countryside which seems practically deserted. This has been the greatest problem of Buenos Aires, handling the masses of people who have come in discouraged from the farms.

"Out on the pampas, the thing that strikes the eye is the windmills. There seem to be more windmills than cattle. There is no coal to speak of in the Argentine, and the Andes are too far away for securing electrical power, so the wind is the best source of power. Drouths hit these plains frequently, and clouds of locusts make almost everything else disappear.

Resources Are Livestock
 "The Argentine's resources are principally in the form of livestock. Some idea of the number of cattle down there can be obtained from the fact that one of their big exports is dried blood, to be made into fertilizer. American capital has built huge refrigeration plants in the Argentine, such concerns as Swift's, Armour's, and Libby's.

"Their chief crop is alfalfa, which has just recently been introduced. Flax seed, wheat, corn, grapes, sugar, and fruit are also grown in large quantities. The Argentine's most important tree is the quebracho, Spanish for 'break an axe,' signifying its hardness. This tree furnishes tannic acid, which is used in tanning animal hides, one of the big industries down there.

Argentine's Minerals Slight
 "The Argentine's minerals are relatively slight compared with the rest of South America. Coal is especially noticeable by its absence. They have large resources of oil, however, which is being developed by the big American companies.

"The Argentine has the finest system of railroads in South America, 25,000 miles of them. These have been largely built by the English. There is a saying down there that the English built the railways, the French constructed the docks, the Italians run the restaurants, the Americans own the mines, and the Argentinians live in Paris!"

STATE LIBRARIAN TO SPEAK HERE TODAY

 that a student select a field of major interest, for, as Mrs. McClain said, "The librarian must know a little about everything, and if she doesn't specialize in something before she finishes school, she never will." Mrs. McClain recommended social thought and problems, and history as good fields in which to specialize. The library worker is, of course, expected to know a good deal about literature. The sciences, however, according to Mrs. McClain, are generally left to specialists.

"Book Selection" Topic
 The University is giving two courses in library work this year. The first, taught last term by Miss Lenore Casford, periodical librarian, was on reference work and library methods. The second is being taught this term by Mrs. McClain, and is called "Book Selection."

Several library courses are offered by the University during summer school, when an attempt is made each year to bring a leading librarian from the East or California. There are usually courses on cataloging and high school library work given, as well as others.

Appointments with Miss Long for students who are interested in library work may be made through the dean of women's office. Miss Long will be able to meet appointments from 1:30 until 4 Thursday afternoon, and until 10:30 Friday morning.

Infirmiry Draws Capacity Group

Stipe Confined on Eve of Campus Play

The University infirmiry was yesterday once more filled to capacity, and some students in need of medical care had to be turned away because of lack of room.

The cause of confinements is varied, although there are no serious cases at the present time. Jack Stipe, however, came to the infirmiry yesterday suffering from a throat ailment and found it difficult to use his voice. He was scheduled to appear in the four-act comedy, "The Single Man," last night but at a late hour yesterday it was undetermined whether he could take part in the play or not.

Besides Stipe the following students are confined at the infirmiry: Dorothea Goodfellow, Ruth Irwin, Elizabeth Carpenter, Carol Watson, Norman Cool, Christine McCullough, Sydney Cowan, Kelsey Berland, Boyd Yaden, Orville Bailey, and Craig Rankin.
