Parody

In summary of a long list of activities that may attract the interest of students, the Daily Illini of the University of Illinois sets out what it considers six advantages of participating in extra-curricular work. They are:

1. Gives rating privileges.
2. Acts as an incentive to grades.
3. Forms lasting friendships.
4. Develops personality.
5. Trains for professional and practical work.
6. Shows way to live with the world.

Completing its editorial, the Daily Illini says, "For the student who has ability to both keep up his studies and work in activities, we believe that he is neglecting a vital part of his university life when he stays out of extra-curricular participation."

An Oregon senior after reading the Illinois editorial found it subject for rather cynical comment. After four years in extra-curricular work, he was impressed more with its disadvantages than its advantages. He revised the six points to read in this manner:

1. Sets up false standards.
2. Acts as a preventive to grades.
3. Forms surface friendships.
4. Perverts personality.
5. Trains for petty racketeering.
6. Shows way to appear to live without really knowing the score.

While these points may seem wholly facetious, there is something to be said about the disadvantages that may come from participation in extra-curricular work. Often a student shows more real strength of character when he stays out of student activities. Many times the leaders in student affairs find that their class work is suffering because of lack of time to devote to studies. For the campus "politicians" the friendships formed are often only surface friendships. Perhaps there is even a degree of "petty racketeering."

But for the student who can indulge in extra-curricular work without neglecting his class work, and who is working with the thought of acquiring practical experience for later life work, there is much to be gained.

Political Puff-Balls

AFTER a nomination speech three minutes long the two major candidates will each speak for three minutes, outlining their plans and platforms, IF ANY.

The Emerald political editor was shrewd enough to supply the "if any" when writing the above sentence in his story on nominations yesterday morning. He realized that in past years nomination speeches have been mere utterances regarding personality and committee appointments.

Members of the associated students must not be blinded by the thought that new ideas, policies, and so forth, are absurd when the duties of the student body president are considered. His job is far from one of sitting around in his sanctum balancing a pencil on an ash tray or making a pep talk at some rally assembly. The president is the cue man in the activities of the associated students. He must formulate his plans as soon as he assumes office. HIS PLANS SHOULD BE CRYSTALIZED BEFORE HE IS ELECTED.

The president of the associated students appoints certain members of committees. He, with the president of the University, names two members of the finance committee. Members of the athletic committee are chosen by the president. The appointive members of the publications committee are selected by him. The music committee is organized by the president's choices. Members of the forensic committee, the student building fund committee, as well as one member of the student relations committee are named by the new and retiring presidents. The president of the associated students acts as chairman of the student relations committee, the publications committee, and the executive council.

Thus we have a picture of a portion of the powers of the president. By constructive policies hinged around each of these committees a man may be marked as qualified for the position. His committee appointments could be made in the best interests of his policies regardless of political promises.

To have men with definite platforms up for the approval of his fellow students would indeed make toward solid student government with a definite future.

AT THE ASSEMBLY TOMORROW MORNING WE ARE EXPECTING EVIDENCE OF DEEP THOUGHT AND SINCERITY FROM THE CANDIDATES WHO SPEAK.

Students Warned By Deans Against Shooting Rapids

With the advent of the canoeing season, Hugh L. Biggs, dean of men, and Hazel P. Schwering, dean of women, have deemed it advisable to warn students of the regulation concerning shooting the Willamette river rapids.

A statement issued jointly by the two deans yesterday follows: "It seems expedient at this time of the year to call the attention of the students to University regulations against shooting the rapids on the Willamette river in canoes."

"During past years the river, particularly that portion of it known as the rapids, has taken a rather heavy toll of student lives."

"Unless one is an exceptionally good canoeist and strong swimmer, it is not wise to venture out on the Willamette river at all, and no student should attempt the rapids."

LOKEL YOKEL PUTS THE HOME TOWN ON MAP

When Archibald Peniweather was but a very young child he was overcome by a strong desire to some day become a great detective. At a very tender age he began to study with that purpose in mind, and the greatest aid to his childhood training was an English joke book which he read from cover to cover. This reading taught him keen insight, as he was obliged to study quite intensively to discover the meaning of the jokes, and to attempt to find the point. (Later on he read the Wetfoot and obtained the same results.) Well, little Archie eventually came to the university and became a detective in earnest. His great study was along the lines of "suspicious characters." A certain group which frequented part of 13th street most of the day troubled him a great deal. They were a harmless enough looking outfit but they were always talking in some remote language which other students couldn't understand. Finally, however, Archie decided that people who smoked such awful looking pipes, and were continually trying to mimic lawyers couldn't possibly be dangerous. While at the university Archie made some startling discoveries. For instance he found out that all the ATO's don't spend their vacations in the university infirmary, that all college men don't sell life insurance during the summer months, and that the university band really isn't the best in the world. When he graduated the University of Oregon lost a valuable asset. In fact he took two Friendly hand sheets, and several pieces of dormitory silverware with him.

IT'S A GOOD THING THAT THE EMERALD MADE THE ANNOUCEMENT YESTERDAY. NOW A GOOD MANY STUDENTS CAN TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THE AMPLE WARNING AND TAKE A TRAIN OUT OF EUGENE TOMORROW.

Little Ga Ga just looked over our shoulder, and she wants to know what anyone would do with a train when he did get it out of Eugene. To which we attempt a wan smile as we slowly reach for an imported Irish brickbat which we had been saving for campaign purposes.

Dear Friends:
"Did you see that fellow that just came in, Mr. Skeie?" I asked after one of the collegians left the store.
"Oh, yes, what did he want?"
"Well, he's all excited about being initiated this weekend and is bemoaning the fact that he can't get his pin for quite a while. . . . I guess he wants to plant it, and you know he can't plant his brother's pin. So he was in a dilemma."
"Maybe we can help them out. Do you suppose the Greeks will like this plan?"
And here is what Mr. Skeie offered. If all of the neophytes about to be initiated into the secrets of the brotherhood or sisterhood will come down to the store and pick out the pin they desire to wear or plant, Mr. Skeie will order it and it will be here sooner.

Yours,

R. C. Hoerber Receives Gift at Class Banquet

Dr. R. C. Hoerber, instructor in English, was presented with a tennis racket by his American Institute of Banking class in public speaking last Friday at a banquet given at his home in Portland by the class. This banquet followed the last meeting of the class, which was Friday evening.

Dr. Hoerber has gone to Portland every Friday since the beginning of fall term to teach this class which is made possible by the American Institute of Banking. This institution sponsors some 12 different classes for persons interested in advancing in the banking world. Upon completion of these various courses the graduates receive an A. I. B. certificate which is more or less required for advancement in banking at the present time.

Economics Classes Prepare Luncheons

A series of luncheons prepared and served by the members of the home economics class as a spring term feature of the course will be held beginning Tuesday, May 12, in the Household Arts building.

Each girl in the class is given an opportunity to plan and prepare a meal as an individual project while some other student or interested party invites the guests, either paying for their meals or having them buy the tickets.

Zelda Monroe, sophomore in education, will conduct the first practice luncheon on the 12th and Miss Lillian Tingle, department chairman of household arts, will invite a number of her friends as guests.

Later on the luncheons may be open to those interested on the campus.
