Well, now that elections are over and we've settled down to buying our own cigars, we can fall back into the old rut of tritring to please (copyright secured according to law).

Which of course is nothing more or less than a suggestion. We haven't been able to discover, on the spur of the moment precisely what the motif for the junior prom is to be tonight, but we're hoping and praying that it isn't going to be a spring garden, because after the sixth dance that way it gets monotonous.

And also today, come to think about it, is the historic day on which the frosh are to burn their green lids. The frosh haven't anything to cry about. All they have to worry about or do, is to burn their caps. All the rest of the burning, in its various forms will doubtless be attended to by the sophs and order of the "O."

At last we believe we've found the prize glutton for punishment. What's this we hear about a certain young man who drives a Chrysler roadster and who is also the editor of a college newspaper getting ducked in the fountain yesterday for chatting with a certain co-ed and then, while the scars of the fray were still dripping from him, being tossed in again for the same offense?

I'm a streamer, aren't we, Hall? HUSKIES TAKE HIT-FEST GAME BY SCORE OF 8-6

(Continued from Page One) the third with two runs of their own on three successive hits. Minnaugh's fine catch near the right field wall saved further scoring in that session. In the next inning the Huskies tied the count on three more hits. Bloom's ability to make Anshutz and Hutchinson pop up easy flies kept more Huskies away from the plate. Oregon made two futile hits in each of the fourth, fifth, and sixth innings without scoring. A medley of hits, walks, and errors gave Washington three runs in the sixth.

Double Play Features
The Webfoots tried hard in the seventh, succeeding in chasing Putnam to the showers, but their spurt fell one short of tying the score. Stevens, Minnaugh and Barnes banged out singles before a man was retired, the Duck short-stop scoring. Vern Arnett then poked the ball squarely into the hands of Nelson, Husky keystone guardian, who pegged to Heaman, who relayed to Sullivan at first for a double killing.

Londahl and Shaneman started the hitting all over again with two more singles, putting Minnaugh across. Coach Tub Graves yanked Putnam and sent in Arthur, who checked the rally without wasting any time. The lean Mr. Arthur subdued the Ducks thereafter.

The second tilt of the two-game series will start at 2:30 this afternoon. Ken Scales, tall Webfoot right-hander, will try his luck against the heavy artillery of the Washington line-up. Probably Gaw will start in the box for the Huskies.

Law Men Get Fish Limit Despite Bad Car Wreck
Determined to go on a fishing trip, Charles C. Howard, professor of law, refused to let such a little thing as a car wreck deter him in the least from his purpose, according to his own version of the episode. Professor Howard, in company with two law students, Howard Greene and C. S. Shimanek, were bound for Indian creek on the Maipleton highway last Sunday when Professor Howard's car, in which they were riding, skidded off the highway, dropped over a 15-foot embankment, and came to rest in the creek bed below, after rolling about 35 feet. As neither of the three men were injured they crawled out of the car windows and hitch-hiked to Rain Rock, the nearest town, secured help in getting the car out and continued on their way, leaving the auto in a garage for repairs.

After sleeping in the open Sunday night they succeeded in making a catch of 86 fine trout Monday and returned to Rain Rock.

Right Idea, Prexy

AS a result of Thursday's election, there is a man at the head of the student government for the ensuing year who has definitely declared himself on a question that has been the subject for some controversy and the cause of no little ill feeling between student leaders for the past years—the question of the relationship of the executive council to the Emerald.

Previous to the election, the Emerald asked the two presidential candidates the following question: What should be the relation of the executive council towards the Emerald? Employer, advisor, censor, owner, or distinct from it? In answer, the successful candidate expressed the opinion that the Emerald "should be distinct and independent" from the executive council.

Some student presidents in the past have even gone so far as to contend that the Emerald as a student newspaper should uphold all decisions of the student committees, for these committees are composed of students duly chosen by popular election and representative of student opinion. These men held that by criticizing the administration the Emerald was failing to give the proper co-operation.

The contention of the Emerald has been that intelligent criticism of the student leaders will lead to sounder student administration. It has believed that failure to criticize what it considers unwarranted actions of the council or the president is not only poor journalism but a betrayal of the best interests of the students.

Next year the editor of the Emerald can begin his work with a feeling of freedom unknown to the men preceding him at the helm of the student newspaper. Unhampered by the fear of interference from the A. S. U. O. president, he may work intelligently for the advancement of student interests. With discretion he may criticize—with enthusiasm he may praise—the official acts of the student heads.

The Emerald has never felt that it should be subordinate to, or in any way influenced by, the executive council. It wishes to express appreciation to the newly chosen president for his stand on the matter. It is a stand that reflects a deep understanding of the situation that merits our praise and the praise of future Emerald editors.

College Forum - A Relief

A FEW energetic young journalists at Stanford university joined hands the other day to publish a magazine which would have been called the "Stanford Forum," had not the president of the university set his jaw, slammed down his fist, and snapped out his decision "No!" Just how such a good live-wire magazine as those boys are publishing could besmirk that precious Stanford name, we do not know.

Well; anyway, the book was issued under the name of "College Forum." And it is a dandy—sparkling, light, and extremely readable. It is a credit to the colleges of the Pacific coast, and let us thank the Stanford university president for lending his influence in making it a general magazine rather than restricting it to a single campus or stunting its popularity by becoming a university organ of propaganda.

Editor Gunnar Norberg has the right idea. His aim in publishing the magazine is to give student writers, who are edged out in the competitive fields of established periodicals, a chance to present their wares. College Forum "makes it definitely its policy to have as contributors entirely, so far as possible—college students." As evidenced by his first issue, he aims to have the publication sell—for it is flashy, attractive, and neat—even though the stories included may not be wholly sound.

It is exceedingly refreshing to see a few young writers come right out with the dope on subjects they believe they know more about than do a gang of brybeards who make their approaches quietly yet philosophically sound. It takes students to tell whether or not college educates. Well, Davie G. Lyon, of the University of California, writes a "criticism of criticism" in his story on "Does College Educate?" And Sam (Somebody) says, "To Hell with Examination! Let's Learn Something."

Each of these boys has hit upon a good subject for any discussion. They've started something and they're starting it right, and our wish is that it will continue. A story written by a member of the Oregon Daily Emerald staff is to appear in an issue of the College Forum in the near future.

It was certainly splendid of so many students to exercise their individuality and split their tickets at Thursday's election.

"There's always a first time," said the Order of the O men as they dipped the head of one student after another in the campus fountain. Yes, and occasionally there is a second.

"I've ridden the logs in white water"
— says Chesterfield

© 1931, LIGGETT & MYERS TOBACCO CO.

Yet you'll find me swapping stories at the club"

It's no easy matter to pilot a bucking log through white-tipped rapids. It's even harder to pry a Chesterfield smoker loose from his choice. A man wants taste in his cigarette and in Chesterfield he gets it...The better taste of milder and better tobaccos—nothing else! Nothing else is needed...thanks to the "cross-blend," which brings out the aroma and flavor of the tobaccos themselves!

Greater mildness... better taste!

FOR NINETEEN years, our Research Department has kept intimate touch with every new development of science that could be applied to the manufacture of cigarettes. During this period there has been no development of tested value or importance to the smoker which we have not incorporated into the making of Chesterfield cigarettes.
