

Oregon State Nine To Play Ducks Today

Final Home Tussle Will See Webfoots Facing Al Brown

Reinhart's Men Will Have Chance of Landing Second Place

Fighting for an even break in the season's baseball play with Oregon State, the Webfoot nine will meet the Beavers on Reinhart field this afternoon at 4 o'clock. It will be the final home game for Oregon, as the second of the two-game series will be played tomorrow at Corvallis.

Oregon still has a mathematical chance of moving ahead of Washington State and clinching second place in conference standings. If the Cougars should lose both of their remaining tilts with the University of Washington and the Webfoots should knock over Oregon State twice, second would go to Oregon.

Mimnaugh To Play
Reinforced by the return of Brian Mimnaugh, slugging outfielder, from a conference which he was called upon as student body president to attend, the Webfoot team is in shape to hand the boys from Corvallis a fancy trimming. Mimnaugh missed the last four games of the road trip. His bat should strengthen further the heavy Oregon offense.

Among the sluggers that have been improving of late is Roy Shaneman, regular catcher, who leads all Oregon batters. Shaneman has been knocking home runs regularly. Johnny Londahl has been hitting consistently since the opening of the season. His all-around play at second base has helped to build a reliable infield.

Stevens Stars Consistently
Perhaps the best player in all departments of the game this spring has been Kermit Stevens, who guards the short patch. Besides scooping up grounders all over his territory, Stevens has come through at the plate time after time with sharp singles at strategic moments.

Kerm hits them on a line, and when he isn't hitting he is always causing trouble for opposing pitchers with his hawk-like eye. When he can get a walk he takes it and then proceeds to swipe all the bases in sight.

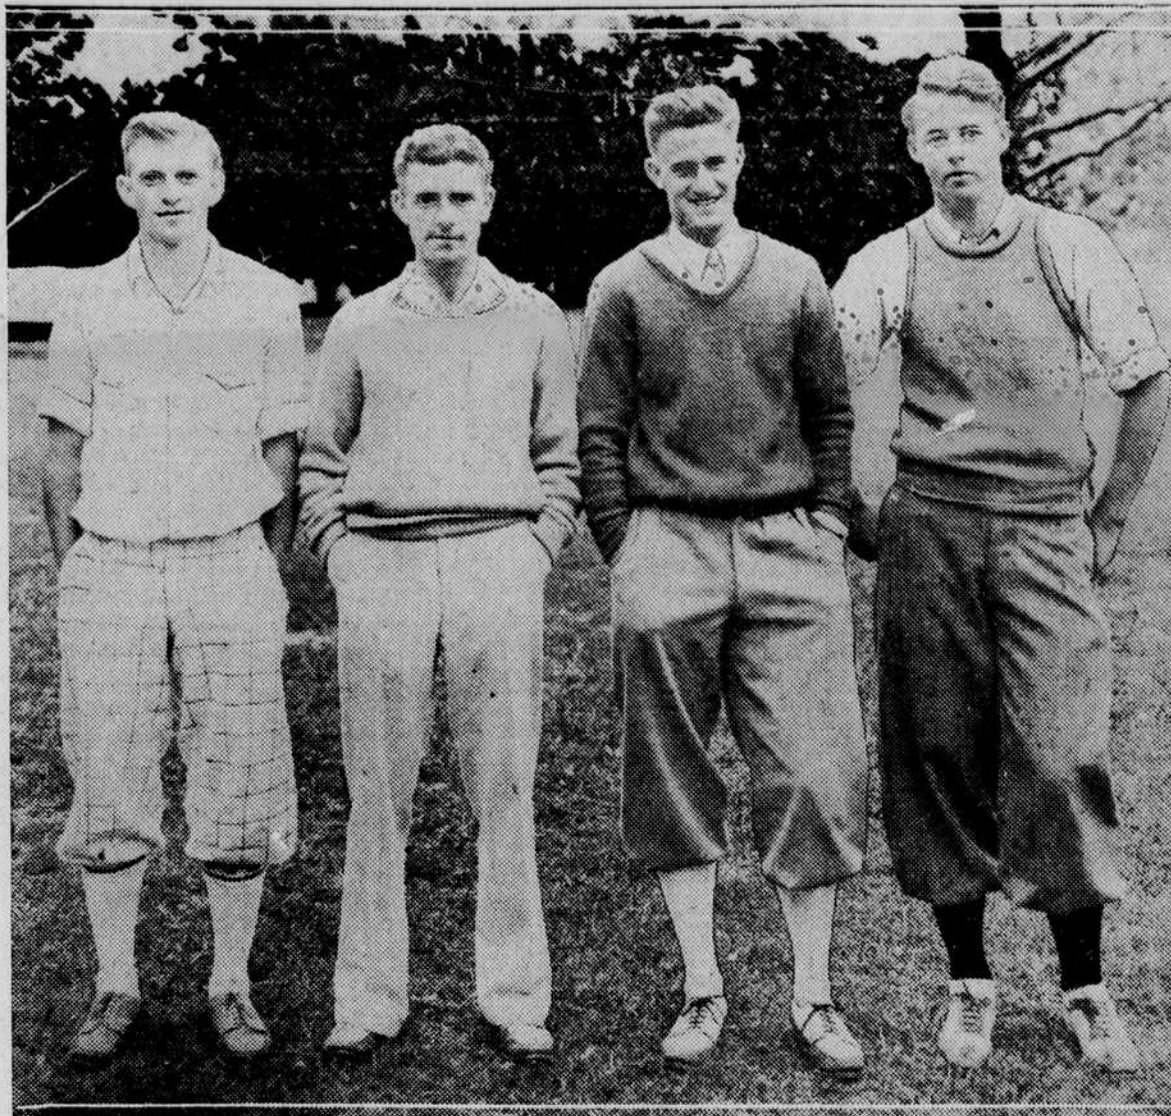

Two Seniors in Outfield
Lee Chester will be on first today. Les socked his second homer while on the road and will have his eye on that left field wall this afternoon.

Cliff Potter hasn't mastered the fine points of third base play yet but Cliff always tries hard and has a habit of hitting when nobody expects him to.

In the outfield for Oregon will be Mimnaugh, Kramer Barnes, and Vern Arnett. The latter two are seniors. It will be the last chance for Oregon fans to see them in action in intercollegiate baseball. Chappie King is Reinhart's versatile utility man.

Bloom Will Pitch
On the mound will be Dave Bloom, pitching his last game for Oregon. After an unsteady start, Bloom has been going better in later games. It is his chance to show the fans that he is better than Buck Grayson, Rod Ballard, and the other array of Beaver batsmen.

Ralph Coleman's pitching nominee will probably be Al Brown, his star right-hander. Brown already holds one victory over Oregon this season. He may, however, be in for a warm afternoon facing a team with a general batting average of .317.

Liquor Will Detect

WASHBURN COLLEGE, Topeka, Kan., May 28.—A new invention by Prof. R. W. Marger, of the Indiana university school of medicine, a graduate of Washburn, will detect the presence of liquor on the breath, and measure the degree of intoxication of the suspect. The active element in Dr. Marger's new machine is simply an old chemical compound in a new dress. The machine is expected to be of great value to police officials in dealing with drivers suspected of being under the influence of liquor.

A Reinhart Finish—

As long as Bill Reinhart's teams maintain the habit of getting better as they progress through the season, we're satisfied. Remember, in basketball the squad lost several games and then recovered and ended the season creditably. The same thing is happening in baseball. Bill has got his men out fighting for second place even if first is beyond reach. This is a far better situation than having a team start out like a whirlwind and ending up in the cellar. How Bill keeps his men from losing heart we don't know, but it is the gift of a good coach.

Last Time Today—

Today is the last appearance of the ball players on the home field and Oregon State will be the visitors. Tomorrow the two schools will end the season at Corvallis. The Webfoots have a good chance of smacking the Beavers this time although the Staters have won two games from us. The reason is that the Ducks have improved vastly, while the Beavers have slackened up. Oregon has won four of the last six games played, while O. S. C. has run into tough luck, even Idaho knocked them over twice.

Webfoots Ready—

The biggest reason for placing money on the Webfoots is that the two pitchers, Dave Bloom and Ken Scales are in great shape to hurl the games. They have had a whole week's rest. Then every man in the line-up has been hitting the ball, and the fielding except for one Idaho game, has been what it should be. Brian Mimnaugh has returned to the team, after being absent during the last four games. He will bring back a little more hitting strength.

Hayward Optimistic—

Oregon's tracksters have a good chance of winning the northwest championship at Seattle, but the edge favors Washington. The preliminaries will be staged today, and the finals tomorrow. Bill Hayward seemed confident that his men would come through, and when Bill feels that way, there's a reason. Latest news is that Paul Swift, the Cougar star sprinter will be out. He was figured to take both the 100 and 220. Now Paul Starr, Webfoot man, has a chance to win one of these.

A Poet Athlete—

Ernest G. Moll, professor of English, who has just published his second book of verse, entitled "Native Moments and Other Poems," is an athlete and a sportsman. For three years Moll was an All-Australian football player. He starred in professional rugby which is a rough and fast game. Moll also coached tennis at Colorado college. Recently he took up fly fishing and has become an expert.

Woman Studies for Graduation 25 Years

WASHINGTON STATE COLLEGE, Pullman, May 28.—Twenty-five years ago Naomi Smith, a State College co-ed, left school before graduation. Since then hundreds of students have done the same thing through varied circumstances. But here's what distinguishes Naomi Smith from the rest: In the interim she married Bruce E. McGregor, Prosser attorney, managed a home and reared two sons—and still found time to study. Today, after having completed more than 50 credit hours by Washington State correspondence courses, Mrs. McGregor is a candidate for her B. A. degree.

Eighteen U. O. Trackmen Entered in Events At Seattle

Webfoots Are Enthusiastic Over Prospects of Taking Title

Enthusiastic with the hope that they may return with the Northwest conference track title, 18 Webfoot track and field men left Eugene last night at 6:30, bound for Seattle and the northern division track meet to be held today and tomorrow.

18 Men Make Trip
The 18 men who made the trip were Art Holman, Chuck Dolloff, Jack Rollwage, Johnny Marrs, Paul Bale, Virgil Scheiber, Paul Starr, Tom Moran, Ralph Hill, Bob Hall, Len Steele, Hubert Allen, Ed Siegmund, Bill Palmer, Ed Moeller, Jack Zane, Bun Stadelman, and Bobby Robinson.

Washington Favorite
Washington is favored to win the meet by sport dopsters. Their successive victories over Oregon, Oregon State and Washington State give them a decided edge. Idaho and Montana should have several athletes, however, that will help split up the points.
