Phelan Holds Washington Outlook Dim in Coming Contest With Webfoots

We read in the Seattle Times today an article that went something like this: "The secret is out—Washington is out to get Lillard and Oregon." And then it went on and elaborated just how and why Phelan and the Washington boys were going to get on and lard Oregon in general and Lillard in particular.

HUSKIES HAVE NO CAPTAIN

As a result of a tie election last year and Phelan's fear of campus politics, the Washington varsity will be without a regular captain for the first time in many years.

HUFFORD WILL PLAY

The old hue and cry an injury to Merle Hufford, the Husky, is out again. Regularly, before the Oregon-Washington game for the past two years, Hufford, potential All-American, and the big threat in the Washington backfield, has developed an injury that has kept him out of the game in its entirety.

tirety, the ace only getting in for a few minutes and under the handicap of said injury. A dispatch from the University of Washington stated today that he came out of the Montana game with a leg injury that may or may not keep him out of the game Saturday.

FROSH BATTLE VARSITY

And the daily grind continues. Doc Spears has a good share of his famous geniality back again, although he hasn't let up on the boys in practice a bit. Special line work, featuring the protection of the passer and kicker, and the backfield men drilling on an aerial game took up most of the time until quitting time at 7 o'clock last night.

Team Drills For Saturday Seattle Tilt

Varsity Meets Frosh in Practice Game

Coach Stresses the Need of Offense and Defense Fundamentals

Coach Doc Spears continued to drive his team through another of those stiff three-hour practice sessions yesterday as the coming contest with the University of Washington next Saturday at Seattle draws near.

Doc Spears Idaho showed Spears that Oregon had plenty of reserve backs and also that the line needed a lot of drill. Time and time again the Vandal forwards sifted through and nailed the Webfoot backs in their tracks.

Under the direction of Coach Jack O'Brien, who scouted the Huskies last week, a freshman eleven was sent against the varsity, using some of the plays with which the Huskies swamped Montana. Another part of the session was devoted to perfection of a pass offense with Lillard and Rotenberg doing the throwing.

On the way to the convention, the delegates were entertained by the Portland Advertising club at a luncheon. Here Schenk was presented with the Portland Advertising club scholarship of $150 given yearly to the most outstanding junior in advertising.

League Difficult Topic For Debates, Says Miller

"We find it quite difficult to win a debate on the League of Nations," said Robert Miller, one of the trio of Pacific Basin debaters, while at Sydney, Australia, in a letter to Walter E. Hempstead, of the speech department.

Frosh Scrimmage Uncovers Future Varsity Material

Callison's Yearlings Use Phelan Shift Against Doc Spears' Team

Scrimmage with the varsity has been Prink Callison's course of diet for his freshman football squad during the past few days, and in so doing he has uncovered some unusual talent in the Frosh ranks.

From the huge squad of more than fifty men several backs and linemen have shown near varsity prowess against their more experienced company. A huge halfback named Koska, a mere 195 pounds of youthful vigor, has been showing his heels to many of his fellow mates.

Elmer (The Great) Brown, much talked of from Bend, is also working himself into a steady job under Callison. Morse, Pepinjack, and Eldridge are other backfield men who are coming to the front.

standard as Norway, Sweden, and Denmark already have done. 2. It saves the actual British gold supply. 3. It will act as a stimulant to British industry.

The action which England has just taken is merely a temporary remedy, Dr. Morris explained. It relieves the tenseness of the situation, but it is probably not a remedy for the present business depression.

Miss Helen Norris, of Medford, whose plays have been broadcast over the Oakland station, was recently given a contract by the National Broadcasting company for several one-act plays.

"I've heard people say that the modern young woman is a flapper with clothes her only thought. I defy anyone to say that she is entirely wrapped up in her clothes."

Husky Mentor Dissatisfied With Showing Made By Team Working Hard for Orgeon Tilt

UNIVERSITY OF WASHINGTON, Seattle, Oct. 6.—(Special).—If "Irish Jimmy" Phelan, Husky football coach, is really as pessimistic as he tells the sport scribes, Washington's chances to go very far in the Pacific coast conference this year are very slim.

According to Phelan, he has practically no team at all. He comes forth to the effect that he is weak at center, and he cannot find a pair of guards that is able to hold its own in a tough battle.

When looking over his bunch of backfield candidates he holds his head and moans because he isn't able to find a combination that will click for any length of time. In other words, the picture that Phelan paints shows nothing but dark clouds hovering closely over a dismal, foggy football field.

In this game the Huskies played beautiful defensive ball, but couldn't get their offense functioning properly. Every once in a while they would get together and run a touchdown across the line, but then they would lag back and play listless football again.
