Francis Brockman Starred In Student Recital Tuesday

By JACK BAUER

Last night's student recital, the first of the term, was in large measure a personal triumph for Francis Brockman, talented violinist. Elaine Moore, pianist, sparkling briefly in her solo group, displaying keen tonal finesse and intelligent readings. Helen Robinson provided splendid accompaniment to Miss Brockman's solo groups.

Together they gave a sterling performance of Mozart's difficult "Sonata in D-major" for piano and violin. There was a mutual facility of attack, fine tone from both instruments, and accurate accomplishment of the sparkling figures of the composition.

As solos, Miss Brockman played the Drigo "Waltz Bluettes," familiar to everyone, Beethoven's transitional "Romance in F," a beautiful rhythmic melody, Lubin's unaccompanied "Caprice," and Sarasote's "Spanish Dance No. 8." The "Caprice" was a maze of technical perfection, and the violinist showed complete mastery of every phase of bowing and fingering. The "Spanish Dance" abounded in contrasts of rhythm and tone, and was done with crisp fervor and swaying double rhythm that brought prolonged applause from the large audience.

ing, Mrs. Alice B. Macduff, Mrs. Bruce Bogart, and Mrs. Josephine Parrish Stewart.

who helped campaign for Ramsay MacDonald three years ago. They did detailed lecture work in the Bay region of California. The boys worked as aides to Mr. Stitt-Wilson and filled minor speaking engagements for him.

Telling of his lectures, Campbell said, "It was in the lower Oakland 'skid-row,' where all the unemployed hang out that I got up the intestinal fortitude to make the hardest speech I have ever delivered, in front of some two hundred men. The problem that we had to deal with in our talks were concerned with economics and the present depression."

Wally favors tennis, handball, and swimming in sports, but he claims that he does none of them professionally or even semi-professionally.

In reading, his taste includes books of all classifications. To "This Believing World," a book on religions, by Lewis Brown, he gives the most credit for preparing a background for the answers to the questions in the preliminary Rhodes examination last week.

"I have no hobby," he said. "If anything is worth doing, it's worth making into a business instead of a hobby."

Wally's dramatic debut came with his appearance in the Junior Week-end "beauty" contest last spring. Walking in high heels was a new sensation for Oregon's orator, but his bright red hair added the necessary "local color" to the occasion.

EMERALD of The... AIR

The weekly sports review will be featured during today's Emerald of the Air program over station KORE at 4:15, with Walt Baker, Emerald sports editor, speaking. Baker will discuss the football world, and particularly the hopes of the Oregon "Wandering Webfoots" against the New York university violets. He is keeping in close touch by telegraph with the team, and he has inside dope on how the players are keying up for the game to be played Saturday.

Baker will be able to clear up a lot of vague notions about Oregon's chances. There is little information upon which to base comparisons, but what there is Baker will have on hand when he takes the microphone this afternoon.

Subscription Drive Starts Second Week

Lord Names Campaign Heads for Houses

Phi Psis Lead in Emerald Circulation Canvass; Cross in Charge

With the Emerald subscription drive in its second week, the outlook of a mailing circulation larger than any previous year is well in view, according to Cliff Lord, circulation manager.

"The Emerald's paid circulation this year up to date is larger than it has ever been in former years. We hope this campaign will go over big and our mark will set a goal to work for in future years," commented Lord.

The Phi Kappa Psis lead the list in the campaign, which is just getting under way.

A meeting of all the representatives of the living organizations was held last night at the Sigma Nu house. Pep talks were given and sales points were emphasized for the purpose of pushing ahead the record mark. Representatives in each house will approach the members during the week and the contest will close next Monday.

The award for the leading organization at the close of the contest will be a large pennant in the colors of that particular living organization and will be a permanent gift.

Ed Cross, assistant circulation manager, is taking charge of the drive directed by Lord. His assistants are Nancy Mackle, Harriet Campbell, and Chick Clay.

During the Dad's Day celebration many fathers dropped in the business office and subscribed of their own free will, Lord said.

Parents already taking the paper may be counted in the contest and alumni who are taking the paper may also be counted. Any representative getting 15 or more subscriptions will receive a free subscription for their parents," commented Lord on the contest rules.

Through the results of this drive the circulation staff hope to place an Emerald in the home of every parent and alumnus in order that they may keep in direct contact with the activities of the campus.
