LEMON ◆ PALOOKA

Geez! you're brutes for punishment... well have some more.

Wobbling over the campus... Henrietta Steinke again... enthralling the same male... Liz Wright the voluptuous witch... flashing a bright red dress with dollar-large white polka dots... Bob DeGraffe leaning against a College Side pillar... Julius Rehal in his back-sided tin can... Ed Reames displaying his operation... Joan Adams making a conquest... a pair of bare feet sticking out of a dorm window... a vivid green dress going down the street... with a couple broad white stripes running around the uh-waist... making a very advantageous display.

"ETHYL"

Sound the cymbals and beat the eggs. Here comes Ethyl L. Colhol's report on the Stigma Alfalfa Whoopalong house, located on the corner of Sporteenth and Brawlder Streets:

Dear Pal (Abb. of Palooka): This has been a long time coming, but consider what I had to go through to get it. The night I went over for dinner, I was met at the door by Kop Ee Ching, the oriental houseboy, who bore under his arm a surly looking beast, which I thought first was a dog, and later found out was a dog. Proceeding to a large room near the door, I discovered the bros lying about on the mantles, piano, and radio, all fast asleep. Observing this, and the houseboy having disappeared, I stole silently about the house.

On the main floor I found the dining room, several small guest rooms, and one indescribable chamber onto which I stumbled unthinkingly. In this room was another radio, a fireplace, a number of snapshots, and strangest of all, a sort of elliptical sphere on which were written several famous names which I had seen somewhere but couldn't place.

I started upstairs, but Silver Thaw, whom I found later to be the house pride, interrupted me.

With him was Garrison Stinkaid. I didn't find out whether they named the streets after him or not. They pounced upon me with menacing gestures, and demanded what I wanted. When I told them, they merely roared deafeningly and threw me in the waste basket, where I lay stunned until dumped out into the tennis court the next

Yours bruisedly,

Today's short short short (I could go on like this forever) story "SAM"

Slapjack Sam drew his bifocals and fired. The great beast lay dead at his feet. Turning, he saw seventy-two others charging down upon him (well, seventy-one, if you want to be mean about it). Thundering on they came. On they came, thundering. Came they thundering on. (If you can think of any better way to pad this thing, do it yourself, you big dish of oatmeal.)

Anyway, on they came, but the grisly old fighter was not frightened. In fact he was not conscious. He roused himself from his coma just in the nick of time. He bravely fought off the monsters, and, putting his hands in his pockets, singled out the leader of the herd. The great pachyderm withered under his gaze. Finally, under a hot fire of cream puffs and pistachio nuts, the herd retreated in great disorder.

Slapjack Sam grinned. The sun was settling behind the asure hills. All was silent. The tiger man had found his true happiness.

Theater Workshop Moved

To 13th and Onyx Streets

The Theatre Workshop, formerly situated on the first floor of the Architecture building, has been moved to a house on Thirteenth and Onyx streets.

It is believed that this change will be an improvement for the members of the Theater workshop and those of the pottery department, both of which were crowded into comparatively small quarters.

Everybody likes a cigarette that's milder. Chesterfield is just that and tastes better too. It's made from milder, better-tasting tobaccos. And pure cigarette paper—the purest made.
