Paint-Slinging Vandals

As election campaigns are often marked by mud-slinging, so are football hostilities contaminated annually on this campus and that of our neighbors, Oregon State college, by paint-slinging. Yesterday morning the campus awoke to find orange "O's," "O. S. C.'s" and similar legends in front of every campus building, and on the walks by many fraternity houses.

The height of the vandalism was reached when the Oregon Pioneer statue, one of the campus' most valued art possessions, received its share of the orange marking.

Whoever did the paint slinging here did so with the misdirected idea of arousing school spirit. From many aspects, the paint job here was an inside one. The vandals too readily picked out every important spot on the campus to daub with their brushes, and also were too discriminating in picking the fraternity house walks and porches to decorate.

If the vandalism was the act of Oregon students, as it appears, the campus should not let itself be tricked into an act of reprisal against the Corvallis campus. If the job was done by Oregon State men, there should still be no reason for Oregon students to hop into cars and race 40 miles to smear green paint in retaliation. The whole affair works into a vicious circle of animosity between the two schools which is, it is true, "spirit," but of the most unhealthy nature.

Each school, through its freshman and varsity football teams, will have the best available means of "retaliation" this weekend. Let us allow the matter rest and hope that in the future football campaigns will not be waged with paint.

A BENEFIT game, the product of the brain of Owen D. Young, great American financier and economist, is at last a reality here in the state of Oregon. The two state institutions, the University and the State college are now parties to an agreement to play a charity game in Portland on December 5 with the University of Utah.

Aside from the fact that the proposed game is for one of the best causes possible in these times of economic stress—that of the unemployment fund, the coaches and players of both institutions will be sacrificing a great deal in order to put it on. Oregon State's schedule ends November 14, or with the Oregon game. Providing Oregon State wins, they will have to stay in training and keep working out until December 5, an extra session of 23 days.

Here at Oregon, Doctor Spears has taken his boys across the continent to New York; the whole schedule has called for approximately 12,000 miles of traveling. The team has been in training for about three months and has been absent from the campus and studies for more than half of the term, and the schedule it has gone through is perhaps the hardest in the history of the school. And yet, in spite of these facts, Doctor Spears and the football team are willing to meet Oregon State's decision half-way and agree to a benefit game.

At any other time but the present, such action would be extremely doubtful, but both Oregon schools deserve a lot of credit in considering the economic situation as it is present here in Oregon and each coach and his following of players are worthy of the highest praise in forgetting self and team in an effort to carry out a high and creditable program.

LEMON PALOOKA

Good morning, no doubt. Thought you never would get around to this page, but now that you're here, we'll go on with the lesson.

HERE WE WERE POUNDING OUR HEADS AGAINST THE WALL TRYING TO THINK UP SOMETHING FOR THIS COLUMN, AND THEN, LIKE MONEY FROM HOME, COMES THE LITTLE SPLASHES OF ORANGE PAINT.

But look at it this way. Who ever paints the bench, sidewalks, steps, and pioneer's dawgs, spends money for the paint. This enriches the paint stores and wholesale houses. All the frosh ruin their pretty brown pants and there's a lot of lucre for the clothing stores, not to mention the makers of green lids. In scrubbing so hard, they wear out the sidewalks, making more business for the cement companies and contractors. If they break their fingernails, there's a job for some manicurist. When they work up an appetite at such hard labor, the grocery stores are rushed to supply the foodstuffs for the hungry workers.

Morphine Annie, the latest addition to our office. Annie comes to us from Seapooose High School, and is majoring in rumble seats. Her capacity around the office here is a special writer. Outside of the office her capacity is a little over a fifth, that is, unless she has been drinking olive oil beforehand.

As a consequence, the price of wheat goes up, and everybody gets a lot of pep and, there you are, PROSPERITY.

So that makes four of us now that use the same typewriter. There's Little Irwin, the eye that never sleeps. Ethyl L. Coñal, our sob sister, who was born beside the wailing wall, Little Morphine Annie and The Palooka himself.

You might as well get used to Annie right now, cause she is going to be a regular from now on.

WE ASKED ANNIE WHAT HER LAST NAME WAS AND SHE TOLD US IT WAS "NIAS." THE LAST WE SAW OF IRWIN, HE WAS SITTING ON A CHANDELIER TRYING TO FIGURE IT OUT.

So much for Annie.

How about some of you gents sending some guesses as to the outcome of the all-faculty football selections. Remember, the cham- ois beer stein to the winner. In addition we are going to give two passes to the Twilight organ recitals for the next best list. File all entries in the nearest waste basket, and try to collect. The choices of the judges will be out tomorrow.

The Heart Bomb Of Aunt Eppie

Dear Aunt Eppie: Just as friend to friend, Ep, old gal, who is the guy that puts the hay in the silo on Alder street? I have been pondering on this matter for some time, and after seeing some of the "Farmer's Daughters" that emerge from this shack, I thought that I would like to apply for the job.

With high hopes, The Mystery Man.

I hate to disillusion you, but I have heard that the girls living there do most of the work in the silo. I have also heard some of the girls talking in their off moments and I gathered that they kept something besides hay in the silo. Write me some day next Tuesday and I will tell you what they do keep in the silo. (I mean tower.)

With love, Aunt Eppie. P. S.—Don't call it a shack, it's a barn.

but he didn't decide definitely to enter until three days before the exam. His preference in reading of books on social problems and economics had given him a good foundation of knowledge on which to base his answers in the examination.

"The thing that would interest me most at Oxford," he said, "is the Bodleian library, which is older than the British museum and next in size. Also, England will be an interesting place to be during these next few years, as she works out her problems."

George plays golf every Sunday, although he has a "hard time breaking ninety," he says. Chess is his hobby, more or less, and "it's a darned good game." For light reading he prefers biographies and historical fiction. He was a member of the Glee club to the time it was abandoned this year.

Norman Harrington, George's brother, is attending Reed college at the present time. Last year, Norman also was a contestant for the scholarship.

George will be graduated from Oregon next June, and, if not at Oxford, he may go to Reed to get his master's degree.

Doctor's Big Find May Help Senior In Beard Growth

At last! The answer to a senior's prayer has been found.

Dr. Norman Bengtson, a young suburban physician of Chicago, believes he has discovered the Ponce de Leon fountain for hair growing.

Throughout the past summer, the august but ardent senior has vainly been endeavoring to become the proud possessor of a fine hair-sure adornment, and thus be recognized as a full-fledged senior in these respects.

"I believe the new experiments we are undertaking will prove the potency of the treatment against all types of baldness," said Dr. Bengtson. "Thus far I have not had a failure in five years. But the treatment must remain in the hands of competent physicians."

The doctor has grown hair on men who were totally bald, and has restored luxuriant tresses of women. Thus, this newly discovered hair growing injection, which will be included in the list of the betterments-of-man, will bring the characteristic masculine trait to those who formerly were baby-face, bald, and otherwise.

drive past her home on the highway cheering.

As reports have been circulated that the beaver mascot of Oregon State students was stolen from the men's gym Saturday night, it is believed here that the painting was done as a retaliation. State police officers here received a phone call Saturday night from John Wells, campus patrolman at Corvallis, that the beaver had been taken from the gym.

Brian Minnaugh, president of the associated students, had no comment to make yesterday. He preferred to consider the matter as an act of childish vandalism and as one of to be forgotten.

aries, but by promotions to higher positions, by posting pictures of those who are doing a better class of work, by giving them vacations with pay, and in other ways. Also various areas of municipalities compete for the beautification of their respective cities," Dr. Mueller explained.

The Russian laborer works four days and rests one throughout the year, with the exception of five national holidays and a two weeks' vacation with pay, Mr. Mueller said. Under this system, approximately one-fifth of the population is free all the time.

"The women of Russia are employed at practically every job that men are. Many of the workers live in community houses, formerly mansions of the nobility. Many of the nobility left Russia at the time of the revolution and are now living comfortably in Berlin, Paris, and elsewhere. Others remained and were shot, or exiled to Siberia. Some have become members of the communist party and are living in Russia on equality with the peasants," Professor Mueller continued.

The speaker said that a divorce could be obtained in Russia in two minutes for two rubles, simply for the asking. Either the husband or the wife could obtain the divorce without the consent of the other.

Dr. Mueller spent one month of his summer abroad in the interior of Russia, where he observed living conditions and economic and social standards.

Armistice Day To Find YW Freshmen at Peter's Lodge

According to Cynthia Liljequist, president of the Y. W. C. A. Frosh Commission, the cabinet will spend Armistice day at Peters Lodge making plans for the year.

The girls will leave at 10 o'clock and return at 3 o'clock. Myrna Bartholamew will have charge of the luncheon.
