Faculty Members Attend U. S. Historical Review

Andrew Fish, Harold J. Noble, John T. Ganoe, and Dan Clark, all of the history department of the University, attended the annual meeting of the Pacific coast branch of the American Historical society which was held on the University of California campus at Berkeley on December 29 and 30.

The topic of the presidential address delivered by Dr. Clark was "Manifest Destiny and the Pacific," which dealt with American relations to the Pacific area. Dr. Fish read a paper entitled "The Reputation of James Anthony Froude," the English historian who wrote the great work "Sixteenth Century England."

Five Hundred Feet Patter Up Walk to Music Building

Two New Courses Attract 250 Students; Men Predominate

The long board walk leading from 13th street, between the Fine Arts building and Susan Campbell hall and over to the Music building was more crowded yesterday morning than it has been for a long time. Besides its regular traffic it supported an additional 500 feet belonging, in pairs, to some 250 students who perhaps had not made the long journey to the Music building many times before.

The occasion was the advent of Oregon's two new music courses, the "Lure of Music" and the "Appreciation of Music Through Understanding," sponsored here in the University by the Carnegie fine arts research and held under the supervision of John J. Landsbury, dean of the school of music. The courses were announced last term and the announcement stated that due to the experimental nature of the work no musically trained persons would be registered, and, in connection with the class work, there would be no term paper, no final examination, and no fee for the course.

"A greater percentage of the 250 who make up the combined enrollment of the two classes are men," Dean Landsbury stated yesterday. "This is rather gratifying to me as it is generally said that women more easily adapt themselves to music, and as this course is wholly experimental we should be able to get some very interesting reactionary data."

"Through these classes," the dean continued, "we are trying to find the best way to challenge students' attention regarding music. In the 'Lure of Music' we will use actual musical illustrations. We will put the students in a representative environment of music to give them a typical musical experience. All forms of music will be discussed.

"In the 'Appreciation of Music Through Understanding' we will try to analyze the personnel of the class, and, after determining their previous academic experience, we will talk to them in the terms they are already familiar with in an endeavor to break their idea that music is foreign to daily contacts.

"To my way of thinking, an educated man is one who has personal resources enough to entertain himself at least once in a while. I think it is a sorry commentary on our modern life that our spare time is usually used in being entertained or amused by somebody else and having to pay for this. I believe that the thoughts of the leisure hour determine the thoughts of the individual, and we are trying to challenge the thoughts of the students, so that they will have a new channel for their emotional expression, and one they will not lose when they leave college."

Guild Production 'Journey's End' To Appear Soon

Work Resumed Following Vacation; Cast Is All Back

After a lapse of nearly a month since the last rehearsal, the cast of "Journey's End," the major production of the Guild Hall players for the winter term, resumed work in a complete rehearsal held last night in the Guild theatre.

The entire cast was back, following vacation, with the exception Eldon Woodin, who is at present confined in the infirmary with a cold. He is expected to be able to take his role within the week however, so no understudy is being used.

"Journey's End," produced for the first time on March 22, 1929, at the Henry Miller theatre in New York City, has become one of the biggest successes that has appeared either in New York or in London in the last few years. This is the first time the play has been produced in Oregon.

The play is unusual in that it is cast entirely by men. The action all takes place in a dugout on the front line trenches and extends over a period of four days from March 18 to 21, 1918. The play has been described as one of the greatest anti-war documents ever written.

Performances are dated for Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of next week. All seats will sell for 50 cents. It is possible to make reservations early by calling the drama office, 3300 local 217, or by seeing Charles (Chuck) Jones, the business manager.

The cast: Captain Hardy, Ethan Newman; Lieut. Osborne, Gene Love; Private

Social Calendar Being Planned by Dean of Women

The social calendar for the winter term is being compiled by Hazel P. Schwering, dean of women.

All organizations which are planning dances, teas, or other entertainments are requested by the dean to schedule such events with her immediately. This will make it possible to complete the calendar and release it at an early date.

Many of the social functions for the term have already been entered on the calendar, Dean Schwering said.

Three Old Newspapers Presented to University

Early American Life Is Shown in Century-Old Copies

Depicting American life as it was nearly a century ago is the outstanding value of the three old newspapers given to the University school of journalism by E. Hall Chaney of Portland. The papers were received by Mr. Chaney in a box of old family letters at the death of an aunt in the East.

Included in the gift is one copy of the United States Gazette, published in Philadelphia, dated October 21, 1835, a copy of the New York American, of November 10, 1835, and also one copy of the National Intelligencer, published in Washington, D. C., and dated October 10 of the same year.

Many interesting stories of current happenings picture the rapid change in characteristics and mannerisms of America. One of these is a fiction story in the American, placed in a prominent place on the front page. The shock of Parisians on the discovery that one of their fellow citizens had married a beautiful German lady who smoked is described, and the article ends with the statement, "It is not yet the fashion here, in short, the Parisian ladies don't smoke!"

The Washington, D. C., publication notes that the population of Michigan intends to organize as a state, and gives the account of Joseph Bonaparte's landing on American soil.
