Cougar Spirit Lies Dying

"BUTCH MEEKER," the tawny cougar emblematic of Washington State college spirit, is a mighty sick cat, we hear. Penned up in a little ten by twelve foot cage, unable to get exercise, "Butch" can only lie still and look out sadly between the bars at a world which denies him his freedom. His appetite is dwindling, and students on the Pullman campus are becoming alarmed lest their mascot die on their hands.

While a life with nothing to do but eat and sleep might appeal to many a lazy college student, as the Washington State Evergreen remarks, it most certainly is not to the liking of "Butch." The cougar by nature is a roaming wild animal, living by its wits, stalking its prey with cunning to survive. Our heart goes out to "Butch Meeker," a sick cat, broken in spirit, doomed to die in captivity. If Washington State college spirit is to be measured by the cougar's agility, life and zest, then there most certainly can be nothing but inactivity and boredom at Pullman when "Butch" lies dying in his cage.

Let the Washington State college campus build a much larger pen for "Butch" and take better care of him if they feel they must keep their mascot, or better yet let them give him to a zoo where he may have more room to roam about and regain an interest in life. We, too, agree with the Evergreen that while the school is planning to spend $100,000 on an ice arena, a few hundred dollars at least might be spent for "Butch's" benefit.

About Face

TF Elmer Pendell's lecture is a representative sample of the series planned by the free intellectual activities committee, the Emerald must recant and write "excuse it, please," across the editorial printed Tuesday under the title, "In Layman's

At least 65 per cent of those present in Guild hall for the lecture were members of the faculty. And we venture the opinion that very few undergraduates could understand the major portion of the address.

We would be the last one on the campus to criticize Dr. Pendell's paper, or doubt the value of a lecture series, but we high. Even Oregon students have their limitations.

Bad times at the University of Washington. The feminist movement to elect a woman vice-president of the student body "flopped" when Tekla Aagaard, champion of the cause, withdrew from the race because she was not getting promised support. A new election committee of 30 members, the third to be appointed this quarter, has been named. Here at Oregon we have been spared so far the worries of campus politics. Let's hope they don't break loose for some months.

Secretary Stimson will replace Dawes on the American arms delegation at Geneva next month. It is hardly proper to send a brigadier-general to a disarmament conference.

Ultra-violet rays of the sun are the cause of organic unrest which is known as spring fever, says a doctor at the University of Michigan. And of sunburn, too, Doc.

We hope the campus chess club's games are broadcast. The games go so slowly that there would be little description of play, and hence some two hours of comfortable radio quiet.

President Hoover and Mrs. Hoover have registered by mail in Santa Clara county, California. Now we're positive that the election is getting closer.

So the band men "proved their metal" Sunday, as the reviewer said. What else could a fellow do with a trumpet or trombone or French horn in his hands?

From my work here, I have learned to analyze political, economical and social problems in the light of present day conditions and not that of the conditions in which most of our politicians are mentally living.

Could it be possible that with "A Graduate Student," as it is with others of us, his failure to aim in himself?
