Thank You, Mr. Bush

THERE'LL be no "beating around the Bush" on the library steps, for Skull and Daggers, sophomore service honorary, yesterday politely said, "No, than you," to the Order of the "O" lettermen who had tendered them the duty (?) of punishing freshman tradition violators with the well-known oak.

Neal Bush, S. & D. president, said this: "Hacking of freshmen on the library steps is hardly the purpose of a SERVICE organization." You're right, Mr. Bush, it isn't.

Did you see what Howard Steib, president of the freshman class, had to say yesterday? "We felt in our class," said he, "that we were going to be greatly honored and trusted when the abolition of public punishment for freshmen was proposed. We believed that it would make the 'wearing of the green' more of an honor and privilege than it has ever been before." Right again.

The Emerald, while opposed to the library steps policy of forcing freshmen to wear green lids, believes the "wearing of the green" a great thing—and we want to see it continued. Green lids work for class unity and strength, and they mold the first-year men together in a common band.

A mighty good alternative for the library steps sessions was suggested at yesterday's N. S. F. A. committee meeting. Why not a tribunal composed of the presidents of the Order of the "O," Skull and Daggers, and the various classes, which would punish non-wearers of lids by making them do some constructive work around the campus—tidying up lawns and shrubbery beds, swabbing the senior bench, which isn't clean yet, and so on? Think it over—it's a great idea.

Women First of All

"BE a woman first of all; after that be a newspaper woman, a teacher, or whatever it is you are planning."

This is the advice which William M. Tugman, managing editor of the Register-Guard, has given women intending to enter the journalistic field.

"If you think that in a career is to be found the highest form of happiness, you are inevitably doomed to disappointment," was another idea which Tugman gave the women to think about.

The craze which women have had in the past two decades for a career above everything else is fortunately, we believe, dying out. We hear less often of the woman who is willing to sacrifice everything for the sake of her career.

This does not mean that women, after injecting themselves forcibly and in many instances successfully into our modern industrial, business world, are just as suddenly withdrawing from it. Not at all. Women are still interested in professions.

The tide seems to have turned from absorption in a career to the complete elimination of everything else in life, to an earnest desire to learn a profession to which one may turn if one has to. Along with learning professions women are studying the many other phases of life with which they will have to deal. The career has been moved from the center of the stage to occupy a position where its relative worth should place it.

Women are regaining their balance, lost with the freedom this generation gave them, and are remembering that they are women first of all.

In these hectic days when such campus traditions as the Junior Vodvil and the "library steps" are being tossed about, two nobler traditions have been shattered. The shock was great, and we feel moved to sound a note of warning lest the repercussions go to the very heart of the campus. Dean James H. Gilbert missed his class in Public Finance yesterday without first giving notice to the students, and on Wednesday, we hear, Dr. James D. Barnett missed his class in Modern Government "for the first time in he didn't know how many years." What to do, what to do?

Dr. Martin Dewey, president of the American Dental association, recently revealed that beer and light wines are not only good for the expectant mother but that they aid in the development of the unborn child's teeth. (Notes of progress: The beer bottle supplants the teething ring.)

We learn that Harvard has abolished Yale locks from its dormitories. In line with this rather startling policy of patriotism, it will be but a matter of time until the Vassar student body puts a ban on Smith cough drops, and Yale takes drastic action against the Harvard classics.

Oregon meets Washington here Monday and Tuesday at the Igloo. Let's not have a repetition then of what happened last week in the stands, or we'll have to change the name rooting section to booing section.

WHAT ARE BRAINS, MAMA?

And it looks like our years of learning the pyramic, in hopes of being a music teacher, are in vain. We don't know a thing about electric trains, model airplanes, or motor boats.

And following up the questionnaire we printed concerning the entrance requirements we had to pass to become a full fledged muck-raker, we hyarby publish a little dialogue that takes place just following every feature editor's suicide.

Ed: Alright, Mr. —, we'll see how much you know about this position. Why does a hen cross the road?

Aspirant: (stupidly) What road?

E: Any road at all.

A: Well, I don't see how you expect—

E: Don't give it thought. We'll drop the matter.

A: Yeah, but what wuz you saying about a hen?

E: Nothing. Next to Harpo Marx and Hoover, who are our funniest men?

A: S. S. Smith, Jack Hempstead, the debate team and Bill Hayward.

E: Now we're getting somewhere. Talk like Joe College.

A: Okeh, Ien talk likim, sure. Wynnya temme to do sumpn likat inna firslapce.

E: Great. Give twelve words for "Girl."

A: Bim, twist, moll, babe, wren, femme, biddie, jane, skirt, gal, frail and floozie.

E: Splendid. What can you all ways fall back on if all else fails?

RESERVED SEATS

To the Editor:

Tuesday night at the Idaho-Oregon game a large section was set aside, reserved, for those people who had complimentary tickets. Numerous townspeople who paid admission had to take what they could get, or what was left.

Some time ago an announcement was made in the paper that there would be no reserved seats at basketball games—everyone had an equal chance for a good seat—why not keep it that way?

The people of Eugene support the athletic games, and it seems that those who pay admission should be entitled to good seats. I am not complaining about the amount of complimentary tickets given out, nor are any other people I have talked to, but there is a complaint about the partiality shown. Those chosen few are enabled to see the game free—why should they have a special section when those who pay admission have to sit in some undesirable place? Let them have their free tickets, but also let them take what seats they can get along with the others. It seems to me that the paying public should have the choice, if there is to be one, or at least an equal chance.

DELEGATES TALK OVER OLD TIMES AT MEETING

Democratic but Independent, he explained to Dean Allen, in the course of banquet talks. Quincy Scott, new cartoonist for the Oregonian, was told that deadlines sneak up, that they don't gallop down. But Bob Allen, of Sigma Delta Chi, told Sterling in what magazine he read one of his best stories—the one about the "wenches" being dilapidated. "Dichotomy"—for the benefit of those editors who do not have dictionaries in their hotel rooms—means "bifurcation."

Hal Hoss and Elbert Bede are out to give each other all the publicity they possibly can. Bede poked his head in the door at the "daily editors'" meeting, interrupting Shelton F. Sackett's talk on the future of the newspaper business with, "Is everybody here for Hal Hoss?" The editors chorused, "No." In return, Hoss addressed his banquet speech to the toastmaster, to the ladies and gentlemen, and to Elbert Bede.

Being delayed in getting out "yesterday's paper," Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Mallory of the Oakland Tribune arrived just as the banquet came to a close. Mallory is a past president of the Oregon State Editorial association.

125 DELEGATES ARRIVE TO OPEN PRESS CONFAB

according to Mr. Richardson. "The rate of pay in newspaper shops is probably considerably higher than that of any other small-town industry," he said.

Typography Gains

David Foulkes, mechanical superintendent of the Oregonian, depicted the steady development of typographical efficiency and how this development facilitated the progress of the newspaper industry.

"We are doing work today in newspaper plants, in the rush of a day's work, that a few years ago could only be done in the best of trade plants. The local advertiser can now stand shoulder to shoulder with his national and foreign brothers and not be ashamed," Foulkes said.

The United Press and Associated Press acted as hosts at luncheon to members of their services. Sigma Delta Chi, Theta Sigma Phi, and Alpha Delta Sigma entertained the others attending the conference.

For the afternoon session, the delegates were divided into two groups—daily and weekly—for discussion of individual problems.

William Tugman, managing editor of the Eugene Register-Guard,

Oregon Athletes Good Students

'FOREVER ALWAYS' IS REMEMBERED HERE

(Continued from Page One) where he used to work in a quarry mine. His specialty was, it seems, fine cutting for cornices and so on. He said he used to have to work long hours in the sun, and we think that it—well—overcame him a bit. He seemed a bit queer.

"Oh yes, he said he was married, and had a fine wife—a writer. Probably for some small publications; he didn't say. Then he said he turned all his property and money over to her and set out to walk. He told her he'd be able to pick up enough money on the way, but I know he didn't have much when he got here.

"Then he got the idea of walking up to Alaska and crossing to Asia and walking down through China and Japan. I told him, 'Why, man, you're crazy to try it this time of year. Winter is just setting in and you'll never make it.' And I advised him to wait till spring, but he wouldn't do it.

"I told him to write me when and if he got to China, and possibly I might publish some of his papers on what he found there. Well, I got one letter, and that didn't say much. Since then I haven't heard a word. And I'm sure that if he tried to make that trip I probably never will."

WAR DEBTS ARE USED TO CONCEAL ERRORS

City in 1928-1930, with the result that the most outrageous speculation in history was made possible. Federal reserve officials justified this inflation policy by maintaining that a higher rate would wreck European systems by drawing their gold to America. A courageous policy on the part of the Federal reserve might have checked the inflation in Europe and in the United States, and perhaps have prevented the collapse."

Professor Crumbaker explained that the United States apparently had a narrow escape from financial difficulties, as seen by the withdrawal of nearly a billion dollars in gold, and whether this danger is over or not is not clear, he stated. "While the reparations and war debts are important, they should not be used to cover up policies that have long since been proven to be uneconomic and unsound," he concluded.

GIRLS

Do Not Smoke Pipes

THE GIRLS haven't left us many of our masculine rights. They fly our airplanes, drive our cars, smoke our cigarettes—but they don't smoke our pipes! They've left us this one manly right, anyway.

A man almost has to smoke a pipe nowadays. A pleasant necessity! For a pipe filled with good tobacco is just about the best smoke a man could want.

And if you're troubled about selecting a tobacco, remember that Edgeworth is the popular favorite in 42 out of 54 colleges. It somehow seems to fit the college man's taste. Edgeworth is cut especially for pipes, it burns slowly, it gives a cool smoke. You can buy Edgeworth wherever good tobacco is sold. Or, for a special sample packet, write to Larus & Bro. Co., 100 S. 22d St., Richmond, Va.
