Modern Dance Is Motive of back to the art museum to resume his studies. Spring Recital This Evening

Cook To Present Solo Interpretations

The spirit of the modern American dance, which is definitely an art of space and design, will be interpreted for the Eugene campus this evening in the Spring Dance recital, which Miss Marjorie Forchemer is presenting in Gerlinger hall at 8 o'clock.

The numbers, which vary from high comedy to low comedy, from melancholy to the sombrely tragic, from the tangible to the abstract, will be accompanied by Miss Edith Grim.

In this modern dancing nothing is done for display of technique. The individual counts for nothing except as he contributes to the whole. The rhythm and interpretation of music form the essence of the spirit and the background for the movement. Costumes are used to block out certain portions of the body and to emphasize line. Lighting is used to create and sustain mood and atmosphere.

Each of the dances is different fro many that have ever been presented before and each one was individually created by the students. Particular interest centers in the Master Dance presentations: the Devil dance, which is satire, and in the last number, Notturno, an idealism, which is purely abstract, symbolizing the individual striving for the unattainable. Solos will be presented by Faye

Knox, Marie Meyers, Elinor Fitch, Lucille Hill, and Alyce Cook. Claire Fahe and Marjorie Landru work together in one number; Caryl Hollingsworth and Juanita Young in one; Claire Fahe, Marie Meyers and Virginia Hunter in another. In the "Afternoon of a Faun," danced Miss Fitch, the accompaniment will be played by Janet Fitch. In Miss Hill's solo, the Second Hungarian Rhapsody, the accompaniment will be provided by Norma Lyons at the piano.

Those taking part in the program are members of Master Dance and of the University dancing classes. Approximately 85 dancers appear. Master Dance, which is the honorary dancing organization, is composed of Virginia Hunter, president; Marie Meyers, Lucille Hill, Caryl Hollings-
