

Bill Advocates Renew Action For Move Bill

you made for the expansion that is bound to come, or are you planning to give 1932 education to college students of 1952?"

An editorial clipping from the Springfield News illustrates this point graphically. Says the News: "The kind of economy the Zorn-Macpherson bill preaches is that of a man who has spent his savings for a home to burn it down and live in a tent, thus lowering operating expenses."

Survey Quoted
The federal survey has been quoted considerably by those favoring the bill, yet the fact remains that in the summary chapters of the survey, after all factors had been taken into consideration, says it would not "be better at this late date to unite the two institutions on one campus; there is no practical means of getting the investment back from either campus if one were abandoned. Both must be utilized now."

Further, the U. S. office of education, in an official bulletin, shows that the per capita annual cost is considerably higher in schools that operate as a consolidated institution than in states where separate institutions are maintained. The average for combined schools is $442, or $50 more than in separate institutions.

A vicious attack has been made on the normal schools by the Zorn-Macpherson crowd. They claim that Oregon's teacher training work is next to the lowest in efficiency of any state in the Union. There are 24 states that require less teacher training work than in Oregon; there are 18 that require the same two-year course; and there are only six that require more than Oregon. Thus Oregon, instead of being at the bottom of the list, is ahead of 24 states, on a parity with 18, and is topped by only six. If the effectiveness of Oregon's normal school work is low (and it is not as low as proponents claim) then the way to raise it is not by disturbing and shifting and making uncertain the whole system, but rather by concentrating on the methods of the present institutions.

New System in Effect
Today Oregon has a new system of education, unified, and operating under a central board and a single chancellor, who are saving almost a million dollars a year. The system has gained the unqualified praise of the nation's leading educators. The road to cooperation, less cost for education for more persons, and a harmony between all units of the system is in sight, pending the defeat of the Zorn-Macpherson bill which has hampered the fruition of the new plan into a complete and smoothly functioning system. If the bill is passed, Oregon is headed straight for a long and discouraging period of weakened education, higher taxes, and less efficiency.

Finally, Oregon needs an Oregon system of education. The problems in this state are peculiar to this state alone. Geographical and industrial conditions demand a system that is peculiar to Oregon. Being chiefly an agricultural state, Oregon needs a separate agricultural and technical school, where these subjects will not be submerged beneath the cultural subjects. The topography and size of the state demand normal schools to serve the various sections. The present system has grown naturally, fitting itself to the state. To vote 317 X No means the assurance that Oregon will continue to maintain a system peculiar to itself, a system that is part of the state itself—a system that serves most effectively and economically the entire commonwealth.

Tales Of Sacrifices, Worry Mark University's Founding

By JOHN W. ANDERSON
Nine years after Eugene F. Skinner settled at the foot of Skinner's butte, Eugene City had its first college.

The University of Oregon came to Eugene as the result of agitation for a high school.

Lane county people raised the $50,000 to build Deady hall and assure permanent establishment of the University at Eugene in time of financial panic.

School children gave their spending money to put windows in Deady hall.

The University had a preparatory, as well as a collegiate department at the beginning.

For years, the University was never without money troubles.

The foregoing are a few of the highlights of a series of articles on University of Oregon history appearing in the Eugene Morning News. Some of the material was obtained from A. G. Walling's "Illustrated History of Lane County," a copy of which was loaned to the News by J. Baxter Young, Springfield, one of the child donors for the Deady windows. Other sources included old records stored on the campus, early catalogues, a thesis written by Margaret Bannard Goodall, Eugene, in 1904 and recollections of surviving participants in the University battles of the '70's.

Some of the records were so faded as to be almost illegible. The series has been illustrated with aged pictures carefully preserved by Eugene people and the University library. As yet uncompleted, the piece of research is probably the most exhaustive ever made to record the University's history.

Only old-timers remember that Eugene had a school which attracted students from all over the Northwest and from California long before the University of Oregon was established. This was Columbia college, opened in 1855, just nine years after Eugene F. Skinner built his cabin on the site of Eugene City, now shortened to Eugene. One of the Columbia college students was Joaquin Miller. Various other schools were set up after Columbia college had failed.

First step toward the University was taken in 1870 when John C. Arnold, Willamette graduate, and John C. Veatch, Oregon Agricultural college graduate, opened a school in an old academy building on Skinner's butte, according to Margaret Bannard Goodall's thesis. Presently Arnold was offered the principalship of the district school and he accepted on condition that he might teach some advanced courses.

That was the nucleus of a high school and, since better facilities were needed, a movement was started to establish a high school before some neighboring town made the move.

At a candle-light meeting in

"On July 30, 1875," Mrs. Goodall wrote, "the Board of Lane commissioners, consisting of Governor Grover, State Secretary Chadwick and Treasurer Brown, inspected the property and accepted it in the name of the state."

The University was opened on October 16, 1876. Walling lists the faculty as follows: "Professors John W. Johnson, of the Portland high school, president; Mark Bailey, of the McMinnville college; Thomas Condon, of Forest Grove; Mrs. Mary P. Spiller, of Forest Grove; Miss Mary E. Stone, of St. Helen's hall."

The series goes on to tell of the early struggles of the University financially; of the times Henry Villard, president of the Northern Pacific, came to its rescue; of J. J. Walton's difficulties in obtaining money to pay the faculty. One story shows how the University's standards were placed low at the beginning to meet the specific needs of the state and with the expectation that they would be raised as rapidly as the students were ready. The preparatory department was temporary and also filled an immediate need.

As a result of the News' publication of all obtainable names of donors to the Deady hall fund, it was learned that nearly 50 were still living, more than 20 of them in or near Eugene. On the day of the Santa Clara football game, October 1, the latter were gathered together for the dedication of Little Deady hall, replica of the old building set up for campaign purposes at Eighth and Willamette streets. They were given a luncheon and were guests of honor at the football game. As they renewed old friendships, not a word of regret was expressed for the hardships endured in the campaign nearly 60 years ago.

Homecoming To Be Eventful For UO Alumni

Frosh-Rook Tilt Slated To Follow Bonfire

District Delegates Are Named For Alumni Association; To "Fight for Oregon"

The annual Oregon freshmen-O. S. C. rook football game, long a classic, is on the bill-of-fare for Homecoming Oregon alumni on the night of November 4. The game will be played on Hayward field in Eugene and promises as much action as characterized the games between the first year teams last year.

The game will follow the annual bonfire rally, the first event for the Homecomers who are fortunate enough to return to the campus Friday.

Slogan Chosen
"Back to Fight for Oregon," will be the Homecoming slogan this year, and the alumni meeting in Guild theater on the morning of November 5, at 9:30 o'clock will feature a rally of alumni to the cause of the University. Coming but three days before the election, the meeting is expected to attract a large crowd.

There will be more to the meeting, however, than an expression by alumni of their confidence and faith in the University. Several important business matters are scheduled for consideration.

Delegates Appointed
In connection with the formal meeting of the association, delegates have been appointed to represent the various sections of the state in the alumni convention. Under the present plan for Homecoming, officers of the alumni association are elected for a two-year term, but it was felt this year that an effort should be made to have all parts of the state present.

With this idea in mind, letters have been addressed to 42 alumni who have been asked to represent their districts. Owing to the delay in reaching a decision as to whether the O. S. C.-Oregon football game would be played in Corvallis or Portland, and the cramped financial condition of the alumni budget, it was not possible to have the several districts ballot for representatives.

List Submitted
Those thus drafted for service are:

Group Asked to Attend

This group has been asked to make a special effort to attend Homecoming this year, but where this is impossible they are asked to suggest the name of a local delegate.

Alumni also are being asked to join the students and make the trip to Corvallis from Eugene and return by special train. In this way a great deal of time and effort may be saved and traffic congestion lessened.

Following the return to Eugene after the game, there will be an alumni reception in Gerlinger hall and a dance.
