It seems that the Social Problems club of Columbia university called a meeting to protest against Secretary of Labor Doak's ruling against the non-quota foreign students who are supporting themselves in American colleges, only to be informed that the regulation adopted in August forbade the holding of such a meeting unless approved and sponsored by a member of the faculty holding professorial rank. In fact, the university administration refused the use of the McMillin Academic theatre to the club, which proposed to hold another meeting to discuss the conditions of chain-gang labor.

"The Nation" remarks that President Butler, whose professed ideal for a university has always been that of a group of mature scholars, pursuing independent research and free thought with the instruments provided by the university, has seemingly contradicted him self in actual practice. The magazine says that his slogan might well be: "Keep your mind open, but keep your mouth shut."

Thursday night students of this University participated in a symposium, sponsored by the speech department, in which the merits of the Republican, Democratic, Socialist, and Communist candidates were considered. It was the type of thing that one would expect to find in any body of thinking, mature open-minded people. It was a frank discussion, doubtless worthwhile to all who attended. Certainly, it harmed nobody.

There seems to us nothing really wrong in Columbia's edict that all public discussions must be approved by the proper authorities, though it is a rather surprising rule for Columbia to adopt. It is the manner in which the rule has been applied, the refusal of students' requests for open meetings where present-day social and economic problems may be discussed, that seems to us objectionable.

We are glad that our own administration is one that looks at such situations in an open-minded, intelligent attitude. It would be most unfortunate if political symposiums and "So-and-So for President" clubs were forbidden on Oregon's campus.

If you think Oregon has no chance for the title remember that strange things have happened this year in the sports world. Who would have guessed that the Portland baseball team would win a pennant for the first time in 18 vears? Who would have guessed that Bates would hold Yale scoreless and gain a tie? And also that game in Portland indicates that the Webfoots are in for some peculiar football during the present season. After thinking it over I have reached the conclusion that the Editor of the Emerald will be rewarded with three passes to the Colonial theatre if I fail in this prediction. If you can't use passes will make it a milk-shake at the finish of the football year. Sincerely, Glen Godfrey.
