

SCHOOL BILL PUT UP TO STATE ELECTORATE

Voters Choose U.S. President At Polls Today

Roosevelt Slated To Win Over Herbert Hoover

ODDS STAND 5 TO 1

G.O.P. Backers Hope for Another Upset Like That of 1916; Oregon Dubious State

The voters of the United States of America go to the polls today to elect a chief executive for the next four years. Their choice is expected to be Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Democratic nominee, and a fifth cousin of Republican President Theodore Roosevelt, famed as lieutenant-colonel of the Rough Rider troop in the Spanish-American war.

Opposing Roosevelt will be the present incumbent of the presidency, Herbert Clark Hoover, Republican. Running with him, as he did four years ago, will be Charles Curtis, vice-president of the United States. In 1928 the familiar Hoover-Curtis ticket was a one-sided victor over a Democratic combination of Alfred E. Smith and Joseph Robinson.

Looks Like Roosevelt Straw ballots conducted by the Literary Digest and the Hearst newspapers, the latter solidly behind Roosevelt, have given a decisive margin to the Democratic nominee. Lesser polls, especially those taken among special groups such as college students and professional people, favor the president.

The main hope held out by Republican newspapers and partisans is that the trend of the public opinion will be similar to that in 1916. In that year Charles Evans Hughes, distinguished Republican, was a universal favorite. He went down to a narrow defeat before Woodrow Wilson. G. O. P. supporters pray that this November's situation will be analogous to that of 16 years ago, when the betting favored Mr. Hughes by laughable odds. Last night the current odds were 5 to 1 on Roosevelt.

G. O. P. Still Hopeful Oregon is considered a doubtful state, although the generally sagacious predictors believe the commonwealth will go Democratic, its naturally Republican inclinations notwithstanding. The state's two principal newspapers, the Republican Morning Oregonian and the Democratic Oregon Journal, have conducted the bulk of the verbal campaigning.

Both Eugene newspapers, the Register-Guard and the Morning News, favor Hoover. If University students vote in reality today as they did in the Emerald's straw poll several weeks ago, they will cast the bulk of their ballots for the president. Hoover received 60 per cent of the campus votes, against only 27 per cent for Roosevelt.

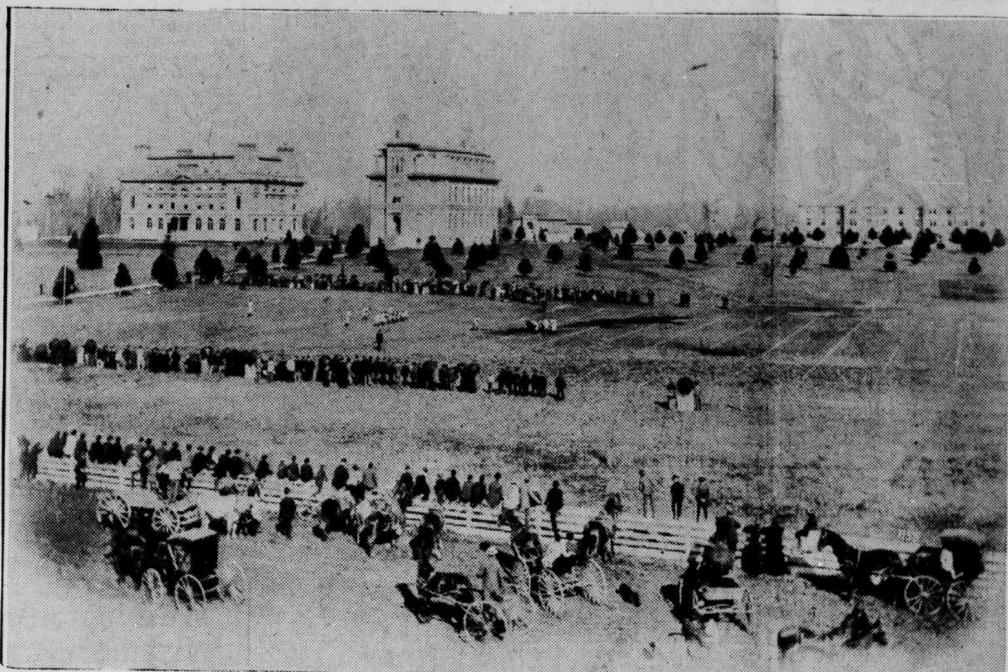

Campus Is Unusually Quiet Preceding Decisive Election

By JULIAN PRESCOTT

It was the day before election and all over the campus men and women were talking—no, not about the election, but about the everyday things of university life, classes, ball games, bridge, dances. That doesn't stand absolutely unqualified. A few were discussing the possibilities of Hoover and Roosevelt in the presidential race. A slightly larger number was still perturbed somewhat about the Zorn-Macpherson consolidation bill. But as far as congressional, state, county and local candidates and the 12 other measures on the ballot were concerned, the student voters were, as a whole, silent. Interest in the whole election seemed to have waned.

Downtown it was a different story. Business men were bustling around. But their activity was confined largely to what the voters are going to do as to one bill entitled: "Bill moving university, normal and law schools, establish-

T.R. Was the Politician of the Roosevelt Family When This Happened

The above vivid and colorful football panorama shows the dashing University of Oregon gridiron eleven of 1894 marching through Albany college, 44 to 2. Prink Callison, Herr Mikulak, Senor Morgan, Monsieur Morse and the other Webfoots weren't even born when this happened. The date of the stirring encounter was March 24. The lads got mixed up and played baseball in the autumn and football in the spring. The field is located where Commerce and Oregon halls and the Y. M. C. A. now stand. In the background to the left is Villard hall. Note the many small trees that today are giant firs. These were planted through the endeavor of the late Dean John Straub. Although the crowd was considered large at that time, even double its number at a present-day game undoubtedly would give Hugh Rosson nervous prostration. Cal Young, pioneer of Lane county, was coach of the Oregon lads when they performed in such dashing style as above.

Line-Play and Teamwork Bring Back Beaver Bacon

By DAVE WILSON

How about the individual cogs in the great Lemon-Yellow grid machine that pushed over Saturday's victory? It is only natural that the spectators should give most of their attention and the newspapers most of their space to the flashy backs that tote the ball, get off the long punts and throw the fast passes. But what are the linemen, the blocking backs, the interferers doing when the crowd roars approval of a brilliant run or a flashy play?

Temple's brilliant run would have stopped far short of the end-zone if Captain Bill Morgan had not been ahead to block out the Oregon State safety on the ten-yard line. Oregon would not have been in position for that first touchdown if Butch Morse, who turned in a fine performance at left end, had not fallen on Bianco's fake-fumble before it could roll out of bounds on the O. S. C.'s 33-yard line.

Right-end Chuck Wishard, aided and abetted Bill Bowerman, wing-back for that side of the line, made the going mighty tough whenever O. S. C. tried an end-run or off-tackle play in their direction. Stan Kostka didn't carry the ball much, but without his blocking and heady performance mighty Mike Mikulak's line smashes wouldn't have gone as far as they did.

Don't let Temple's winning run blind you to the fact that his punting saved the day for Oregon. O. S. C. counted on Keith Davis to boot a wet ball five to ten yards farther than Temple, but when the average yardage was figured up, Davis was only two feet to the good, or an average of 33 yards to 32.4 yards for Temple's kicks. And with Davis booting them out of bounds on Oregon's five and ten yard lines every so often, the wonder is that Temple got off except one of those "behind-his-own-goal" kicks back to mid-field.

Give Morgan, Frye and Hughes their share of the credit for that first touchdown. After Bianco's (Continued on Page Four)

By BRUCE HAMBY Rumors that John J. (Jack) O'Brien, assistant varsity football coach, and the associated students had severed connections were common gossip on the campus yesterday. The rumors could not be verified, although members of the football squad and campus news correspondents were sure of the truth of the reports.

Neither Ronald H. Robnett, assistant graduate manager, nor Prink Callison, head football coach, had anything to say on the matter. Hugh Rosson, graduate manager, is en route to Los Angeles to arrange details of the Oregon-U. S. C. game, and could not be reached.

No Meeting To Date O'Brien has not been seen on the Oregon campus for several days. To date he has not conferred with A. S. U. O. officials and no official discharge or resignation has been released by the graduate manager's office.

A final announcement on the authenticity of the rumors should be forthcoming within a few days. Acted as Scout The Webfoot coach came west with Dr. C. W. Spears in 1930. When Callison was appointed to succeed Spears, O'Brien was retained in the same capacity, although most of his time was spent scouting Oregon opponents. He was also expected to tutor the freshman baseball and basketball candidates this year.

Difficult Interview Reveals Facts About Wally Campbell

By ANN REED BURNS

It was hard to get a sensible, serious-minded interview with Wally (Wallace J.) Campbell, because the conversation seemed to be keeping going off on tangents such as the number of feet ruined at open house or the merits of the presidential candidates. But finally the most essential facts were gleaned.

Wallace J. Campbell, who is one of the four Rhodes scholarship candidates from the University of Oregon, finished his fourth year last June. He was selected as a Rhodes scholarship candidate last year also, but was defeated. At present he holds a graduate assistantship in sociology, while taking ten hours of graduate work.

While attending the University he was very active in the public speaking world, debating for three years on the varsity, and also participating in after-dinner and extemporaneous speeches. Last year he, together with Rolla Reedy and Hobart Wilson, toured 3000 miles through California and Arizona, debating economic questions at ten colleges. He was also a representative to the Pacific Forensic League conference. At the time of his graduation he received $100 in the Falling-Beakman prize for senior oratory. He was a member of Delta Sigma Rho, debating honorary, as well as the sociology honorary, Alpha Kappa Delta.

Scarcely had this information been obtained when the conversation began going off ends again—this time concerning his summers during the four years of college. It seems that the summer after his freshman year, he drove a six-horse team in Saskatchewan, Canada. (He has lived a great part of his life in Canada, although he was born in Montana and attended high school in Eugene.) The next summer he in-
