$860,000 Cut From Budget By State Board

Kerr Asks Departments To Make Economies

Salary Cuts of 9 to 25 Per Cent Face Faculty as Result of Drastic Reduction

Faced with further serious shrinkage in student fees and support from the state millage tax, the state board of higher education, in special session January 8, slashed $860,000 more from the budget of the six institutions of higher education for the coming biennium.

Thus the budget, as drawn up for the coming biennium of 1933-34, will be 31% less than that of the past biennium of 1929-30. In other words, the six institutions will be forced to operate on 69% of the amount expended in the two-year period of 1929-30—a reduction from $9,700,000 to approximately $6,577,000.

In November last the state board estimated that it would be necessary to reduce the coming budget by $670,000, but actual rather than estimated figures on student fee and millage returns indicated a further reduction would be necessary.

On the basis of the necessary cut of $670,000, all departments were called together by Chancellor W. J. Kerr and told to make every possible economy. By making sweeping curtailments in the use of materials, supplies, wages for laborers, and reduction of staff members, it was found possible to make a saving of $580,000. The revised anticipated income as presented to the board at its recent meeting showed that even more than the $670,000 would have to be saved.

To meet this situation, the board ordered a wholesale cut in all salaries, ranging from 9% on $1,000 to 27% on all above $5,000, which netted an additional $265,000, or $15,000 more than was necessary. This extra $15,000 will be placed in the budget to take care of unforeseen emergencies during the coming biennium.

Staub Joins Ranks Of Amateur Pilots

The most recent addition to Portland's group of amateur fliers, composed of business and professional men, is Dr. Raymond R. Staub, M.D., '20, physician and surgeon in the Selling building, who last week passed his examination for a private pilot's license.

In addition to flying for pleasure, Dr. Staub will use his flying knowledge for the furtherance of his profession. His interest in speed started at Washington high school several years ago and developed later at the University, where he was a member of the track teams, running the quarter, half-mile and mile events.

Progeny Plentiful To Oregon Alumni On Christmas Day

THREE new babies, presented to their parents as Christmas presents on December 25, were recorded in Oregon alumni families this year. They are:

A son to Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Hargreaves of Eugene. Mr. Hargreaves attended the University last year.

On and About The Campus

Another Rhodes scholar from the University! Although none of the candidates from the Oregon examination was successful, one student, Don E. Sturman, was one of the four chosen from this division. Since he is a student from Washington, he was presented to the district board by the state of Washington. He has been a graduate assistant for Dr. George Rebec since September, 1931.

Organization of an academic council of the University of Oregon faculty was completed the latter part of last term on the campus. The group will be charged with problems involving the relationships of schools and colleges to one another and the scholastic interests of the University as a whole. At the same time a plan of organization of minor faculties was perfected.

The offices of the informational service of the state board of higher education have been moved to Eugene from Salem. The change involves the offices of C. D. Byrne and one secretary who will be quartered in Johnson hall. The Alumni association shares the southeast offices of Friendly hall with the Eugene branch of the informational service.

William A. Fowler, former associate professor of business administration at the University, will sail February 4 from New York on the S. S. Slamet as one of the professors aboard the first official cruise of the American floating university.

Dr. C. J. McCusker, 58, head of the obstetrics department of the University of Oregon medical school at Portland, died December 25 in Portland. He is survived by his widow and three children. He came to the medical school in 1906.

University of Oregon professors spend more than 44 hours a week in teaching and preparing courses and other academic work, a survey recently completed reveals. More than half of the professors spend more than 8 hours a day for the full seven days of the week, it was shown.

Editors of state newspapers will be guests of the University and Eugene January 20 and 21 as delegates to the annual meeting of the Oregon Press conference to be held then.

HOME COMING HELD BY DELEGATES TO PORTLAND MEET

Oregon Grads Attending Teachers' Association Make Luncheon Annual Affair

A miniature "homecoming" of Oregon alumni took place in Portland during the Christmas holidays when some 75 former Oregon students who were in attendance at the State Teachers' association meetings met at an informal luncheon at the Lincoln high school there on Thursday noon, December 28.

The principal speaker was Burt Brown Barker, vice-president of the University, who explained the new organization of higher education in Oregon and assured his listeners that the system as now in operation is not only educationally sound but has attracted the commendation of eastern educators.

Mr. Barker expressed the wish that Oregon alumni who are now teaching in schools throughout the state should explain to parents of prospective students the high regard in which Oregon's new educational system is held.

Harold (Dutch) Young, '14, who was in charge of the anti-school moving campaign, was called upon and made a few brief remarks about the recent campaign. A. C. Hampton, '18, superintendent of schools at Astoria, and Robert Goetz, '09, superintendent of schools at Silverton, also spoke to the alumni.

Following is a list of those attending the meeting:

Mrs. Alevia Alexander, '24; Margaret F. Sagaberd, '25; Hilda Brant Carruth, '13; E. S. Lister, ex-'08; Mella C. White, '30; Almira Bach, '26; Cora Hansen, '08; Carin Degemark, '13; Ida Stauffer, '23; Louise Jones, '04; H. B. Wells,

Mrs. Williams received her master's degree last spring and left for Germany in the fall, and is now taking a post graduate course in Germanic philology and literature.

HOWARD SCOTT FELLOW STUDENT OF CRESSMAN

Discussing the origins and progress of the famous "Energy Survey of North America," Dr. Cressman told the editing class that while in New York he had noticed many maps on the walls of Mr. Scott's apartments which showed various aspects of the continent's power resources.

Mr. Cressman told the group that Thorstein Veblen's now famous book, "The Engineers and the Price System," was the result of a series of Saturday luncheon discussions in New York which Mr. Scott and a group of other engineers attended regularly.

Concerning the sociological aspects of technocracy, Dr. Cressman, in an interview following the class discussion, said: "The sociologist sees technocracy as a development, about which he has been talking for many years, that finally reaches a point where a desperate people fed by press and radio on panaceas from legalized beer to the Kingdom of God seize whatever seems to promise hope and is picturesque. There are no other trends in contemporary life so basic as industrialization, mechanization and man action. They are inevitable, but what we do in the face of them is not inevitable, but is determined by a set of factors from the past, the present and our future hopes. These factors may be manipulated according to the sets of values of the people in control of our social organization."

"The sociologist sees the technocrat as but one class of people trying to manipulate the most important element shaping our life today—the producing machine," he explained. "The sociologist feels too that at the present the machine is in the saddle. This may be because the machine has been used not with reference to production for human need but for essentially for profit. The question of the technocrats and the sociologist then is the same. Can the machine be controlled by man in the interest of production for human need? The technocrats and many sociologists think it can be if certain changes in political control can be brought about. Otherwise none of them sees any thing but the tragic, weary recurrence of business cycles so long ago prophesied by Marx until human patience breaks."
