The Emerald's Creed for Oregon

"... There is always the human temptation to forget that the erection of buildings, the formulation of new curricula, the expansion of departments, the creation of new functions, and similar routine duties of the administration are but means to an end. There is always a glowing sense of satisfaction in the natural impulse for expansion. This frequently leads to regarding achievements as ends in themselves, whereas the truth is that these various appearances of growth and achievement can be justified only in so far as they make substantial contribution to the ultimate objectives of education . . . providing adequate spiritual and intellectual training for youth of today—the citizenship of tomorrow.

and intellectual training for youth of today—the citizenship of tomorrow...

"... The University should be a place where classroom experiences and faculty contacts should stimulate and train youth for the most effective use of all the resources with which nature has endowed them. Difficult and challenging problems, typical of the life and world in which they are to live, must be given them to solve. They must be taught under the expert supervision of instructors to approach the solution of these problems in a workmanlike way, with a disciplined intellect, with a reasonable command of the techniques that are involved, with a high sense of intellectual adventure, and with a genuine devotion to the ideals of intellectual integrity..."—From the Biennial Report of the University of Oregon for 1931-32.

The American people cannot be too careful in guarding the freedom of speech and of the press against curtailment as to the discussion of public affairs and the character and conduct of public men.

in line with a hungry brother, plate in hand, that defies stilted phrases and forced banality. Sunday is preferable to mid-week nights, as there are no campus activities to make either guests or hosts late to dinner or early to leave.

If Sunday night tea is habitually prepared by the house members themselves, an arrangement could be made with the cook to serve a light Sunday noon meal and then have her prepare the buffet supper in the evening for a slight additional fee. This would solve the financial side of the suggestion. This system of faculty entertainment is being tried very successfully on the campus by one sorority and also a fraternity, and certainly merits investigation by all.

LIGHT ON THE SENIOR BALL

THE Emerald still is occasionally besieged with 1 letters, terephone calls, and personal visits protesting the lighting at the recent Senior Ball. Many persons maintained that the brilliant illumination spoiled the effect of the decorations. Somewhat belatedly we decided to investigate the situation.

Curious, we called the dean of women's office, who referred us to the dean of men, who referred us to Cecil Espy, president of the senior class. Said Espy: "I am satisfied with the dance and refuse to make any comment on the lighting." The statement seemed to us to lack conviction so we pursued our investigations further.

The indirect lighting system at the Senior Ball consisted of small flood lights which reflected against mirrors set in the drapes. The whole motif of the dance was based upon this lighting system. Upon arrival at nine-thirty, Dean Schwering ordered these lights turned around to bring more illumination on the floor, but the result far exceeded anyone's expectations. The flood lights at close range made silhouettes from the formal dresses and the effect was that of a Fanchon and Marco review. However, this was considered preferable to having any unlighted or dim corners

It is our contention that lighting at dances should be sufficient for visibility, but not enough to give the effect of a carnival circus; being able to recognize other couples on the floor a test for the former. A certain softness is necessary to give the proper atmosphere to a formal dance.

Good taste, not morality, serves as the criterion in lighting, according to Dean Virgil D. Earl. This is rather puzzling, but we are glad to know that the lights were not turned around because the faculty suspected that any indiscriminate conduct would take place.

TO THINK OR NOT TO THINK

To what extent are college students seriously puzzled about their future life work?

As many as seventy per cent of the graduates of 1931 in a representative number of colleges are still unemployed. Forty per cent of graduates of 1930 are still looking for jobs.
