

Student Music Classes Show Improvement

Progress Believed to Be Remarkable

Much Enthusiasm and Sincerity of Effort Are Found Among Students in Class

In spite of various interruptions, the Carnegie classes are getting significant results. These classes are conducted for groups of ten to fourteen students. There are classes of violin, piano, voice, organ and cello. The financial backing was presented by the Carnegie Institute last summer.

Dean John J. Landsbury believes the progress of these classes nothing less than remarkable and superior to that of the ordinary individual student.

Differing from the usual procedure, the course of study undertaken in the Carnegie classes considers the root of the difficulty. The difference between the physical and musical technique in piano playing is explained, while necessity of a definite basis from which to begin is emphasized.

"It's always been a pet hobby of mine," Dean Landsbury said in explanation of this new method of teaching. "Of course, it embodies years of thought and study of piano playing."

From the beginning, the students have a definite goal, the methods of reaching it are explained verbally, and they begin working toward it systematically. Thus they learn to think ahead of their playing.

Among the students of his class, consisting of seven men and three women, Dean Landsbury finds a great deal of enthusiasm and sincerity of effort. Through their persistent work and the use of this new method of study they learn to play pieces as well as exercises extremely advanced for the period of time they have studied. Within two weeks, many of them were playing fairly difficult compositions.

Of course, as Dean Landsbury explained, this rational method appealing to the reasoning powers of the individual would not be suitable in training more immature pupils.

Maria Rael Sings Spanish Numbers To Father's Class

From fifth grade to University in one day was the unique experience of little Maria Soledad Rael, who delighted a group of first-year Spanish students with her singing of Spanish songs Wednesday morning. Maria, the nine-year-old daughter of Juan B. Rael, Romance language instructor on the campus and professor of first year class, won the audience completely as she sang "Me Gustan Todas" and "En el Rancho Grande" in a delicately pleasing voice, accompanying the selections with appropriate gestures.

To become a famous danseuse and singer is the ambition of Maria, who is at present attending Condon school, preparing for the time when she will become an enrolled university student instead of a guest singer.

Bequest of Books Given Professor

A bequest of 35 books has just been received by Professor Leavitt O. Wright of the Romance language department, from the late John L. Phillips of Claremont, California.

Wright was instrumental in interesting Phillips in donating his library to the nearby Claremont colleges instead of leaving it to his heirs to be sold, and in appreciation Phillips selected those volumes which he thought might be of most interest to Professor Wright.

Included among the books are a number of masterpieces of the 19th century Spanish novel; a rare copy of the Spanish grammar of the Royal Academy; Renan's Life of Jesus in Spanish; George Borrow, The Bible in Spain; Motley's two volume Rise of the Dutch Republic; Burn's poetical works; Ferri's English Antonyms and Prepositions; Victor Hugo's Quatrevingt-Treize; and Gaffarel's Les Compagnes de la Premiere Republique.

Smith Talks on Peace To Graduate Students

Dr. Warren D. Smith, head of the geology and geography departments, held a discussion last night at the Y hut for a group of graduate students. The topic, "How to Have Peace," was given in the form of a lecture, after which questions were asked and a general discussion held.

Mrs. Richard Horn, nee Dorothy Teepe, is the chairman of the group which is under the direction of the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A.

DEAN MORSE TO SPEAK AT RALLY ASSEMBLY

According to S. Stephenson Smith, associate professor of English, Jackson and Williams in their appearance before the judging committee for Rhodes scholars, "showed power of mathematical thinking and command of known methods of mathematics such as, in my opinion, will only be found twice in 100,000 students. They also showed a good deal of wit in stating their views on applications of mathematics in the realm of aesthetic and social sciences."

The outward mannerism of Oxford is one of higher frivolousness and indifferent attitude, which runs to a defense mechanism, says Stephenson Smith. A necessary credential for a successful Rhodes scholar is a sporting attitude toward life and an ability for witty expression.

Honorary to Have Alumna Guest Dinner

Pi Lambda Theta Tries Education Problems

Permanent Foundation System of Taxation and Finance To Be Considered

Pi Lambda Theta, women's honorary in education, is working to have every alumna present at the Founder's Day banquet on November 18. Plans are being laid by the "Conservation of Education in Oregon" committee to present information at this banquet so that every member will have knowledge at her tongue's tip with which to dispell the existing ignorance concerning education problems.

Mrs. Wendell Van Loan, chairman of the "Conservation of Education in Oregon" committee, said Thursday regarding the local chapter's study plans, "We intend to study what effects the depression has had upon the schools and what retrenchments will be necessary."

She also explained that Pi Lambda Theta will try to find what might be possible in the way of a good sound permanent foundation of the educational system in Oregon, including taxation and financing in schools.

Other members of this committee are Helen Everett, of the University of Oregon library; Ruth Melendy, senior in English; and Maxine Lamb, dean of girls at Eugene high.

Pi Lambda Theta has 348 members throughout the state besides the active chapter here and the conservation committee wishes every member to have complete information regarding the school system of the state.

More University Grads Get Work

Cards filed at the alumni office during Homecoming weekend show that still more recent University graduates have found employment. Work in the educational field seems to afford the greatest number of positions.

Embert Fossum, who was graduated from the school of journalism last June, is employed as a reporter on the Klamath Basin Progress, a weekly paper published at Klamath Falls, Oregon.

Mildred Collins, who received her B. A. degree from the University last January, is teaching in the junior high school at Silverton, Oregon.

Dorothy Clifford, graduate in the class of '33, has a position as librarian at St. Helens Hall Junior college in Portland.

Otto M. Bowman, University graduate in 1929 and graduate of the Oregon law school last June, is practicing law with E. L. Crawford, a former University student, in Salem.

German Disarmament Views Given in Article

Germany's view of the disarmament question is presented in a weekly publication of the German League of Nations Union, "Volkerbund," which is available in the league of nations publications department at the library.

Recent issues contain articles by German leaders on such topics as "National-Socialist Germany and Her Contributions Towards World Peace," "Who Needs Security," "The Main Lines of German Foreign Policy," "Present Position and Prospects of the Disarmament Conference," and "Germany's Aim at the Disarmament Conference."

Publication of the periodical was begun in 1932, and the library has received it since then. The edition received is in English.

Members of Library Staff Will Attend Game

A number of members of the library staff are planning to attend the game in Portland this Saturday. Since the reserve departments are to be closed all day, they will find it easy to get away.

"We don't expect to need many people to run the library this weekend," said M. H. Douglass, librarian, yesterday.

By J. A. NEWTON Here's Another Must

A couple of years ago, a show called "Viennese Nights" was heralded by the writer as the finest picture he had ever seen. The Mac's show, "Berkeley Square" is a very close second to that production. This statement covers a period of five years, during which I have viewed an average of two shows a week.

The impression made by both of these plays is very similar. They stir one of the tenderest of human emotions,—compassion.

In "Berkeley Square" the spectator must not consider the plausibility of the situation. The breaks in mannerism and speech which the twentieth century man makes in the eighteenth century pass as mere incidents beside a love which surpasses 200 years of time. Yet this timeless union of two hearts must be torn asunder when the man returns to the twentieth century to face the reality of his beautiful young love of the eighteenth century being dead over 200 years.

The only material connections between the two are gravestones in a churchyard and an iron cross, the Egyptian symbol of eternal life.

You owe it to yourself not to miss this show. Only one suggestion if you see it at the Mac. Arrange to see "Golden Harvest" first, in order that the effect of "Berkeley Square" not be lost in the comparative lightness of the former.

"Golden Harvest" would be a good show in its own right. In fact, it's rather better than the average show, yet it was lost to me on the same bill with "Berkeley Square." It's built on the

Library Has Fine Binding Exhibits

Bindings of the finest sorts are stressed in the exhibit at the library for Good Book week, which is on display today and will remain out all next week.

The books for the exhibit were chosen by Robert F. Lane, printing instructor, from the library's regular collection and the Pauline Potter Homer group.

The bindings shown represent various stages in book development and various phases of the art of binding. Full and three-quarter leather bindings, cloth, and parchment are all included, each with some sort of ornamentation, such as tooling.

Cards accompany all the books and give notes regarding the outstanding features of the particular binding.

Among those shown are some of the library's oldest books, a miniature book, and some very modern books.

Applications for Cadet Teaching Requested To Be Put on File Now

"All students who expect to complete their work for a secondary school certificate next year and have not had supervised teaching, are requested to file their applications for student teaching with the school of education at once," said Nelson L. Bossing, professor of education, yesterday.

"Forms for application may be secured at the office of the secretary of the school of education. J. Parker Named On Committee of Ion Lewis Trust

Scholarship Fund Stands at $700; Award to Be Made Within Next Current Year

The Oregon chapter of the American Institute of Architecture has nominated Jamieson Parker to succeed Harrison Whitney on the managing committee of the Ion Lewis scholarship, which now stands at slightly less than $700.

Ion Lewis, who recently died in Portland, created a trust by which one student was to be sent each year to Europe to study. Because of the depression this has not been possible, but an award will be made within the next current year.

The managing committee of the scholarship consists of: Jamieson Parker, chairman; M. H. Whitehouse, representing local architecture; and Dean E. F. Lawrence, secretary, representing the University.

Carnegie Funds Will Be Granted For Conference

Western Conference on Guidance And Vocational Adjustment Starts December 29

Funds are to be granted by the Carnegie Corporation for the Western Conference on Guidance and Vocational Adjustment, according to final action of the executive committee of the National Occupational conference, Dr. Howard Taylor of the psychology department was informed recently.

Dr. Taylor has accepted an invitation to serve on the general committee which will consider plans for the conference and to participate in the conference itself. He feels that this conference is important for Oregon, which has a large gap between the vocational training efforts in which students are guided and actual connection between this training and vocational opportunities.

"This conference," Dr. Taylor commented, "will consider problems of educational and vocational guidance, particularly for college students."

The time planned for the meeting is December 29, 1933, to January 4, 1934. It will be held at Berkeley, California, in the International house. Representative men throughout the Pacific coast have been asked to attend.
