

UO Faculty Members Write Books Used as College Texts

Books written by faculty members of the University of Oregon hold an important place in the realm of higher education, in the opinion of Manager M. F. McClain of the University Co-op. and he has the facts to prove it. When interviewed today, McClain called attention to text books by Oregon faculty members that are being used in university courses.

The "Laboratory Manual of Organic Chemistry," by Dr. Roger J. Williams, are the texts for the course. Formerly here, Dr. Williams is now at Oregon State college. Professor Williams also wrote "Introduction to Bio-Chemistry" in collaboration with R. A. Brewster.

The English department is using two books by Professor Ernest G. Moll. These are "Appreciation of Poetry," and "Readings in Poetry."

Freshman Girls Invited to Affair

All freshman women will be entertained by Kwama, sophomore women's service honorary, at a tea in Gerlinger hall from 3:30 to 5:00 o'clock, Thursday, February 28.

Chairman of the tea is Dorothy Dill. Assisting her are Eleanor French and Lillian England. These girls, freshman women's service honorary, will serve.

Questionnaire

Sixty-one girls are convinced that Oregon men spend much on women besides time, while 74 asserted that they don't, several girls even adding exclamations points for emphasis.

Twenty-six girls are worried about men disturbing their study hours in the library, while 96 manage to get along all right.

Eighty girls find that their escorts are prompt to their appointments, while 59 have evidently been in that familiar "sack-holding" predicament.

That Oregon men are versed in elementary courtesies was maintained by 100 girls, while 39 said they are not.

The men fell down when it came to making dates a polite distance in advance. It would seem that 72 girls have to expect a man to call at ten minutes to eight to inform her that they leave in fifteen minutes, while 53 girls find men kind enough to call a day in advance.

One hundred-three girls can satisfy their appetites after dances, while 36 girls have had the bitter experience of going home hungry. Flowers apparently are occasionally received by 69 happy women on the Oregon campus, while almost as many, 66 to be exact, claim that men do not send flowers.

Twenty-nine girls must act in the capacity of veritable bench warmers while their enamored sits in their living rooms. On the other hand 99 women say that men take them out more than they sit at home.

One hundred-seventeen girls, compared to 23, dislike the new vogue of dirty cords. And in the form of a great surprise came the news that 24 women enjoy to be called names by men, even though 112 dislike it.

Perhaps they figured their answer on the basis of the old adage "stick and stone may hurt my bones." It seems that girls of today may have confidence in her man, if the opinion of the majority is to be trusted. Eighty girls are not one bit fearful about the condition of her escort after a party, while 25 must apparently be on the lookout.

And now are the men set up? Just the same, now they have a record to uphold.
