

Campus Play Makes Final Run Tonight

'Queen's Husband' Pleases Attendants In Third Showing Given Last Night

By WILFRED ROADMAN
 "The Queen's Husband" will be given for the last time tonight in the Guild theater starting at 8:00. The court comedy delighted attendants last night with the matters of state and love that runs through Robert E. Sherwood's tale of royalty, romance, and revolution as presented in the University theater's production under the direction of Otilie Turnbull Seybolt.

The audience was again charmed with John Casteel's inimitable characterization of luke-warm King Eric VIII and it liked Alice Hull's interpretation of a "true" queen who placed duty to her country above everything.

Miss Booth, Barclay Do Well
 Portia Booth and Charles Barclay displayed their love-making talents to everyone's satisfaction. As the indulgent, worldly cad who is to marry the king's daughter, Bill Cottrell as Prince William does a small but effective bit of work.

The game of checkers between Phipps, the king's favorite footman and his majesty, also proves to be one of the plays most interesting moments.

No Let-Down Noticed

In general, the play suffered no let-down in tempo or spirit as the result of a week's rest, as the actors seemingly enjoyed themselves as much as the audience.

Tickets for tonight's final showing of "The Queen's Husband" are on sale today from 10 a. m. until 8 p. m. in the theater box office in the administration building. Tickets may be reserved by telephoning the box office, 3300, local 216.

Toastmasters Elect President

George Hall was elected president, and Wilhemina Gerot secretary, at a meeting of the newly formed Toastmaster's club, November 20, in the Y hut.

Charles E. Schofield, of the Iliff school of theology at Denver, led the group in discussion on the problems of war and peace.

The next meeting will be Monday, November 25, at 7 o'clock, at which time George Hall and Wilhemina Gerot will debate the question "Is College Leadership Worth the Price." Hall will take the negative, and Gerot the affirmative.

Marsh of Time

Ere I arrived at my destination I was hooting like an Indian, singing like a cowboy, and bawling like a white-faced steer. But praised be the Lord, upon arrival new worlds opened before me. Sleek cattle, prancing horses, rim-rock echoes, and what a house! It covered that green eastern Oregon oasis like a corporation. And it was a corporation!

A veritable Pitcairn's island accessible by plane in times of emergency! Great shelves of books, lovely china, rich silver. Saddles, riding stocks, fireplaces, and old statuettes. Rooms, rooms, on without end.

Superb isolation! Boston accent? Fourteen years merely made more creek-beds, more gates, more sage-brush. Boston accent indeed! It's a wonder they can talk! Those three McCalls.

The Fordham mascot, a ram, recently disgraced himself by mistaking an elderly woman for a football spy when she bent over to pick dandelions near the practice field. The woman was taken to the infirmary, where it was discovered her injuries were not serious.

Student Sets Forth Secret Woes of Every Roommate

(By Associated Collegiate Press)
 Most students are inclined to bear the foibles of their roommates in more or less anguished silence, but a University of Wisconsin co-ed burst into articulate annoyance recently, and in a communication to the Grippers' Club, student paper column, set forth the woes of all roommates everywhere.

"My dear, dear roommate," she wrote, "we have now enjoyed each other's delightful company for three whole weeks. When I first met you, that beautiful maiden's smile of yours, your every-gay disposition, your happy-go-lucky air assured me that our school life together would be semester after semester of bliss. Certain minor things have come up that irk me. I have tried to tell them to you time and again, but when I see you go blithely through the day, a personification of a ray of sunshine, I haven't the heart to take the chance of spoiling your happiness. So, my beloved roommate, I am taking this opportunity to get these irksome things off my mind, out of my hair. I know you won't read this, and even if you do it will do no good. At any rate, sweetheart, here is what I increasingly can't stand.

 "(a) Wipe that perpetual silly grin off your kisser.
 "(b) When I lend you silk stockings I expect them back. Christmas is a long way off.
 "(c) Who cares how popular you were in your home town? The fact is that my boy friend is sick of forever fixing you up with dates, consequently making himself Man to Be Avoided No. 1 among his friends.
 "(d) Give me at least a 50-50

Psychologist Taylor Gets Queer Inquiry for Advice

Psychologists are confronted with the queerest things! The other day H. R. Taylor, chairman of the department of psychology in the University, received a letter from the Mail-Well Envelope company of Portland, asking learned counsel upon the subject of visual impression.

It seems that the company ran an ad stating that "87 per cent of all impressions are received through the eyes." Some customer in Salt Lake City was self-thinking enough to question the veracity of the statement, and wrote to the company asking for verification of it. A form letter for their sales campaign had been followed, and all attempts of investigation resulted in discovering that everyone had taken the statement as an "accepted fact."

So, they wrote to Dr. Taylor whose research explained, in part: "Professor Griffiths of Michigan reported studies of this kind in which 90 per cent of his subjects relied mainly upon visual imagery. This, however, is not the same thing . . ."

No definite study has yet been found upon which the original statement might have been based.

Law Review Adds Section

Anderson Student Publication Chief

Of chief interest in the forthcoming issue of the Oregon Law Review which has just gone to press will be the first installation of the section known as the Oregon State Bar bulletin, primary official publication of the newly incorporated Oregon State Bar association, according to Professor Charles G. Howard, editor-in-chief of the review.

The bulletin will be comprised of a complete summary of the proceedings of the last bar association meeting.

Martin, Maguire Talks

The December issue of the Oregon Law Review contains the addresses of Governor Charles H. Martin and Robert Maguire, president, at the last Oregon State Bar association meeting; also leading articles by prominent lawyers, recent case studies, book reviews by Dean Wayne L. Morse and Professor Orlando J. Hollis, and notes and comments.

The Review, product of the law school, is found interesting by both professionals and laymen, according to its editor. It enjoys an international circulation.

Students Do Work

Students take an active part in helping to publish the Review. Grant T. Anderson is student editor-in-chief; D. R. Dimick, business manager; Dorothy Kliks, notes and comment editor; James G. Smith, recent case note editor, and Ralph Bailey, book review and statute editor.

The editorial board is composed of members of the law school faculty and students who have had an original article accepted by the publication. Richard Deavers and Clarence Tapscott were added to the board when the Review accepted their recent case studies for publication in its December issue.

Scrap-book Reveal Details Of Life of Mary Spiller

An old scrapbook, for many years tucked away in storage, has revealed a complete sketch of the life and incidents of the University of Oregon's first woman faculty member—Mrs. Mary Spiller. The scrapbook, and with it Mrs. Spiller's Mount Holyoke college diploma, was found among several stored belongings by Mrs. Breyman Boise of Salem whose husband is a direct descendant of the famous woman.

Miss Pauline Walton, library indexer, has been investigating the history of many former prominent people of the campus for the purpose of completing the University of Oregon collection, which will be kept in a separate room in the new library. Miss Walton says that the newly discovered material was the first authentic information that she has been able to obtain.

Mrs. Spiller, who whom Mary Spiller dormitory is named, was born in Blanford, Massachusetts in 1829. She graduated from Mount Holyoke college while very young, and taught for a while in the south. There she met and married

Levi Spiller, wealthy plantation man. Their happiness was marred by the sorrowful civil war years, and Mr. Spiller died the year the war ended.

Mrs. Spiller came to Oregon with her two children in 1875 and taught first at La Creole academy in Dallas and then at Pacific university. Later she accepted a position as principal of the preparatory department and professor of elocution at the University of Oregon. She taught until 1887. Her children both died, and she returned to Massachusetts.

Again, in 1896 Mrs. Spiller returned to Oregon, making her home in Portland, where she died in 1901. She was buried in Eugene in the Masonic cemetery at the side of her two children.

Miss Walton, who faintly remembers Mrs. Spiller, is the daughter of one of the University of Oregon's earliest founders, and has two older sisters who were pupils of the historical campus figure. Miss Walton will have charge of the University of Oregon collection room in the new library.

MISS HOFSTETTER IN SALEM

Dessa Hofstetter writes: "Please send Old Oregon to my new address, 1000 North Capitol street, Salem, Oregon. I completed the year's course in librarianship at the University of California in May. During summer session I worked as part time assistant in the Lange Library of Education on the U. C. campus. I am now in the reference department of the Oregon state library and enjoy my new work very much."

Obviously some of the institutions that we saw, notably a magnificent sanatorium and the club in Kharkov, represent only the ideal, and there are as yet probably few like them.

Of course, it must not be forgotten that in every phase of their activities, the doctrines and spirit of Communism are being taught the young, and this is reflected in their unquestioning enthusiasm.

Tone Response Lab Subject

Dr. Beck's Classes Do Experimenting

Demonstrations of auditory responses upon various instruments were given in psychology laboratory classes this week under the direction of Dr. Lester F. Beck. Members of the classes were allowed to experiment with the photo-projectoscope, which records variations of the voice according to the number of vibrations per second. Phonograph records demonstrated the result of "filtering" out overtones for any range of frequency.

Galton's whistle varies the vibration rate and gives a very high-pitched whistle. This invention of Francis Galton, who was an investigator of individual differences, can be made to whistle above the limit of audible frequencies. Young's tunable bars and tuning forks; one of which had electrically
